THE REMARKABLE WISTERS AT BELFIELD

By James A. Butler, Ph.D., '67

In the 19th century, a number of remarkable women were associated with the Peale House (above) on the Belfield estate. Today, a group of talented women, shown here with Brother President Joseph Burke, play key administrative roles at La Salle. They are (standing from left): Glenda Kuhl, dean of continuing studies; Barbara Millard, dean of arts and sciences; Rose Lee Pauline, assistant vice president for business affairs, and Alice Hoersch, executive assistant to the president. Seated (from left): Gloria Donnelly, dean of nursing, and Joanne A. Jones Barnett, assistant provost.

La Salle's campus in the 19th century called itself home to Abolitionists, Civil War heroes, the Industrial Revolution and "The Virginian." Family members also helped to introduce the sport of cricket and the Philadelphia Orchestra to the United States

It happened in the 1920s, before the Age of Consultants. La Salle's president, knowing that the college had outgrown its location at 1240 North Broad Street, asked the Christian Brothers to keep an eye out for a new campus site. Pushing their way through a high hedge, two Brothers out for a Saturday stroll saw the rolling fields at Twentieth and Olney. The land on which these Brothers trespassed was owned, at least in part, by descendants of the Wister Family;

Standing at right is Mary Channing Wister, who became a civic and educational leader and married novelist Owen Wister. Today the Peale House (far right) is the site of the President's Office at La Salle. Partly built in 1708, it is believed to be the nation's second oldest surviving campus building. across it once strode some of Philadelphia's (and the nation's) most prominent writers, actors, civic leaders, industrialists, soldiers, and sports figures. The history of the nineteenth-century Wisters at Belfield encompasses three adjoining properties—and begins (perhaps appropriately for a future university campus) with a teenager who defied her father.

Early in the nineteenth century, three large estates touched near the present Ogontz and Olney avenues. The famous portrait painter Charles Willson Peale in 1810 bought a property of one hundred and four acres (much of it now La Salle's campus). Peale's house "Belfield," in part built in 1708, is now the President's House. On this property Peale painted and farmed—and corresponded with Thomas Jefferson about their estates of Belfield and Monticello.

To the northeast of Olney and Ogontz was the second estate, "Butler Place" (the house stood near what is now Old York Road and Nedro street). It was home in the 1830s to the doomed marriage of English-born Fanny Kemble, then America's most famous actress and soon to become known as one of its most passionate abolitionists, and her husband Pierce Butler, slaveholder on his Georgia plantation and grandson of a signer of the Constitution. Strong-willed Fanny's discovery that stubborn Pierce took her promise to "obey" as absolute produced one of the nineteenth century's epic and best-documented battles of the sexes. Fanny, especially in her later years, was a regular visitor at Belfield; the park at Ogontz and Olney is now named for her.

William Logan Fisher brought the Industrial Revolution to Germantown, and his woolen mills—along streams still flowing beneath present Ogontz and Belfield avenues—once produced nine-tenths of America's hosiery; his property "Wakefield" stood, until its 1985 destruction by fire, on property south of Ogontz and Olney. Fisher's wife has her maiden name preserved in the Lindley avenue which now forms La Salle's southern border.

Staunch Quaker William Logan Fisher was not pleased when his daughter Sarah in 1826 accepted the proposal of Germantown-born William Wister. Wister may have been somewhat more palatable than his Lutheran forebears, but he was still the son of a Quaker convert and thus a mere "Convinced Friend"—not a true "Birthright Friend." Sarah could not be married at Meeting (they disowned her for good measure), and her father would not hear of any Quaker using his beloved

"Wakefield" to marry some "world's person" who did not even belong to Meeting. The groom's uncle finally offered the Wisters' ancestral home, "Grumblethorpe" on Germantown avenue, and there—in the parlor whose floor was allegedly stained since the Battle of Germantown with the blood of the dying British General Agnew—Sarah Logan Fisher defiantly married William Wister before a Justice of the Peace.

Sarah's father refused to attend her wedding. He did, however, present her with part (the house and twelve acres) of the "Belfield" property that he had earlier in the year purchased from Charles Willson Peale; the rest of the land went to another of Fisher's daughters. The division of Peale's estate into what went to Sarah (land now west of Twentieth street and bought by La Salle from Wister descendants in 1984) and what is on the east side (bought by us in 1926) splits the campus and bedevils La Salle to this day.

William Wister eventually regained the good graces of his father-in-law and operated for him a calico print mill on present-day Ogontz avenue just east of La Salle's baseball field. Sarah remained a somewhat unconventional but still black-gowned Quaker, who (despite being readmitted to Meeting) defied her fellow religionists by such scandalous behavior as keeping a piano in the front parlor at Belfield. Looking from that parlor up the pathway toward what is now Wister street, she once exclaimed, "Children, I see Friend Eleanor Evans approaching. Put the screen in front of the piano!" That screen was only half as high as the upright piano, but it enabled Sarah and Eleanor to pretend to observe the Quaker proprieties. Sarah and William Wister's terrapin dinners—the hapless turtles raised to succulent maturity in the basement of Belfield—were famous throughout Germantown.

Sarah Logan Fisher and William Wister produced a sturdy brood of six boys (William Rotch, John, Langhorne, Jones, Francis, and Rodman), who—among their other achievements—helped to bring the sport of cricket to the United States. Indeed, one writer rhapsodized in 1910 about what is now La Salle's property at Belfield:
"The memories of these days are precious, and it would seem that Providence had preserved this lovely spot intact for the sentimental old cricketers, as the Magna Charta and the Liberty Bell are preserved for the Anglo-Saxon race."

One summer day in 1846, Jones Wister, rummaging through the attic at Belfield, found cricket balls, bats, and stumps left behind by a visiting English soldier. Jones and his brothers drove the stumps into the ground just about where La Salle's tennis courts now stand. One of the early cricket balls hit in the United States smashed through the window of William Wister's (now Brother Joseph Burke's) office and whacked Wister's head. The exact words then spoken by William Wister have fortunately not survived, but his sons did move up the hill to where La Salle's first residence halls now stand and where the Belfield Country Club was founded and survived until the 1920s as a venue for ice skating, tennis, golf, and cricket.

The playing fields of Belfield soon gave way to other fields for the Wister boys: perhaps few Quaker families in the nation had six sons in uniform during the Civil War. Their mother, Sarah Logan Fisher Wister, continued to irritate her Quaker friends and relations by raising funds for the soldiers. Captain Francis Wister fought at Gettysburg, and Langhorne Wister there commanded the 150th Pennsylvania Infantry; that regiment fought at the center of the Union lines facing Pickett's charge. In March 1891, before Brigadier General Langhorne Wister's flag-draped coffin in the Belfield parlor, his niece remembered that the assemblage sat in utter silence for over an hour at this incongruous Quaker service for a war hero.

The doctor who attended Langhorne Wister in his final illness was his cousin Dr. Owen Jones Wister, who had married actress Fanny Kemble's daughter Sarah. Dr. Owen and Sarah Butler Wister lived at "Butler Place," adjoining Belfield to the northeast. A writer herself, Sarah in 1872 was squired around Paris by American novelist Henry James; James greatly admired Fanny Kemble ("magnificent," he wrote, "and draped . . . in lavender satin lavishly décolleté") and found her daughter equally captivating. But James's mother, less sure about this married woman—let alone Fanny's lavish décolleté—warned her son that Sarah was probably not "very dangerous. . . but beware!" No doubt James's mother was pleased when he wrote back that he "vaguely mistrusted" the "almost beautiful" Sarah. Henry James portrayed Sarah in his novel Roderick Hudson and in several short stories. The novelist and such other luminaries as English poet Matthew Arnold and American novelist William Dean Howells visited Butler Place; they may well have wandered over spots where their works are now studied at La Salle.

In April 1870, Sarah Butler Wister ordered her only child, then nine, to hike across the fields to Belfield to visit his newly-born cousin. The Clarkson avenue house that boy came to is now used by La Salle as its Fine Arts Studio (it was built in 1868 by William Rotch Wister, "the father of American cricket" and lawyer for the Stephen Girard Estate). This meeting of the nine-year old boy and the infant girl was memorable, and not only because the two married; he (Owen Wister, named for his father) wrote a novel estimated a half century after its publication to have been read by more living Americans that any other work of fiction; she (Mary Channing Wister) became a civic and educational leader about whom the Philadelphia Public Ledger reported "There is no woman in the city more widely known and respected throughout the country in every walk of life than Mrs. Wister."

The novelist Owen Wister left Butler Place as a child to be educated in Switzerland and in England. At Harvard, Owen first saw Theodore Roosevelt get his

The Horror of the "Snake House"

The old mansion which currently houses La Salle's art classes hasn't always had the neutral name "Fine Arts Studio." In fact, until recently, this Clarkson street building (built for the William Rotch Wisters in 1868) was known by a rather intriguing name—"Snake House."

If this name stirs images of reptile exhibits from past excursions to the zoo or stop-overs at a circus side show, perhaps they aren't too far off the mark.

According to the October 16, 1985, Collegian, "The house, which had been abandoned for 2 or 3 years before La Salle decided to purchase it, is said to have been so named because of the tenants of the house. Years ago, two Russian sisters lived in the house. One of the sisters was a Doctor of Pharmacy and she owned many snakes because of the research she did on snake venom."

Thomas McCarthy, Psychology Department, explained that Dr. Daniel Blain, the famous psychiatrist who had owned the Peale Estate, had used the house for medical residents. Among these residents were the pharmacist and her sister.

The two sisters supposedly hung a sign in one of the windows: "BEWARE OF SNAKES." John McCloskey, formerly vice president of public affairs, explained, "I remember the sign was put up to keep people away."

According to Dr. McCarthy, "Before La Salle purchased the house, students had no involvement on this part of campus. The farm had been there."

Of course, despite La Salle's lack of involvement on Clarkson street, the legend of the "Snake Lady," as she was called, managed to spread in the fashion of whisper-down-the-lane. One source recalled hearing that the "Snake Lady" would stand at the window with a snake around her neck, watching the students as they passed by. Another remembered hearing that she had closets filled with jars of reptile specimens.

Although rumors of the "Snake Lady" were widespread, documented facts about her and the house are sparse. Dominic Marino, the contractor who renovated part of the building, recalled nothing unusual or reptilian.

George Skinner, who worked for Maintenance at the time, explained, "When La Salle took over, I worked in the 'Snake House' and I knew that the lady who lived there had kept some snakes, but I never saw any."

Like the legend of the "Snake Lady," the name of the building has begun to fade. However, it's quite a story, no matter how much of it is true, that among the many people who lived in the old William Rotch Wister house on Clarkson street, was a mysterious woman who slithered in and out of La Salle's past, leaving only the name "Snake House" behind.

This information originally appeared in the "Duffy Tells All" column, written by Kathryn J. Duffy, '94, in the university's weekly newspaper, the Collegian.

Home Where The Mansion Was

The Wister Family owned four homes on the Belfield estate. Two buildings survive: Belfield—or Peale House—itself, and the Fine Arts Studio (built by the William Rotch Wisters in 1868). The William Rotch Wisters' stunning second house, "Wister," was built in 1876 on the side of Clarkson Avenue opposite from the Arts Studio; "Wister" was donated to Fairmount Park in 1949 and demolished in 1956. La Salle used the fourth building, a spooky and gabled edifice in the high Victorian style, to house about ten seniors per year from the early 1960s to 1968. Some awed La Salle student (or some publicity-conscious administrator) called it "The Mansion," and the name stuck.

"The Mansion," built about 1885, was once lived in by Sarah Logan Wister Starr (this Sarah was the granddaughter of the first Sarah Wister to come to Belfield in 1826). The house faced now-gone Cottage lane, which ran from Germantown Hospital to Twentieth and Olney, dividing properties where La Salle has now built Hayman Hall and the St. Miguel Town Houses. Another one of those prominent Wister women, Dr. Sarah Logan Wister Starr served as President of the Women's Medical College (now Medical College of Pennsylvania); she and Margaret Lennon, who served for many years as the college's registrar, were sometimes the only women to march in La Salle's graduation processions. The college strained Dr. Starr's neighborly impulses when it added lights to McCarthy Stadium for night football during the 1930s.

La Salle about 1961 leased "The Mansion" from Dr. Sarah Starr's daughter, Sarah Logan Starr Blain, then living at Belfield. Don McAvoy, '64, remembers life at the Mansion, isolated from the rest of La Salle and surrounded by Belfield's farm animals (chickens, roosters, ducks, and the one cow). The late Brother Gavin Paul, vice president for student affairs, lived in an apartment in The Mansion, but the residents still enjoyed extraordinary freedom compared to the usual 1960s dorm regulations.

But "The Mansion" came more and more to resemble "The Hovel." After La Salle purchased the property, it and next-door twin house "Shaw Manor" fell in 1968 to one of the most pressing of university needs: parking. Those few students who lived in The Mansion belong to one of the most exclusive of La Salle's clubs.

nose bloodied in a boxing match and then acquired a lifelong friend. But Wister, the archetypal Philadelphia gentleman from a talented and distinguished family, had nervous difficulties when faced with the choice of a career. His doctor prescribed a trip West and in the process changed American cultural history.

In Wyoming, Owen Wister found a landscape and the "cowboys" that he blended with saloons and shootouts (and a maudlin love story involving the perky schoolmarm) to set the pattern for subsequent "Westerns." His The Virginian (1902) has sold nearly two million copies and was a hit television series of the 1960s. Four movie versions have been made, and one featured Gary Cooper in his first "talkie." And when Cooper spoke, he poked his pistol into the insulting villain's stomach and delivered Wister's immortal line that summed up the bully politics of the early twentieth century: "When you call me that, smile!"

The woman Owen Wister first met in La Salle's Fine Arts Studio and later married made her reputation by harnessing women's energies to political, social, and educational reform. President of Philadelphia's Equal Franchise Society, Mary Channing Wister fought for votes for women. As founder of the nation's first women's civic club, she set the model for a national reform movement. At the age of twenty-seven, she served on the Philadelphia School Board and became (as the Governor of Pennsylvania later said) "a great leader of educational thought and accomplishment." A California newspaper called her death in childbirth in 1913 "a national bereavement." Theodore Roosevelt, whom the Wisters visited in the White House, sent a handwritten note of condolence to Owen Wister: "Be brave . . . face the darkness fearlessly . . . you must bear yourself well in the Great Adventure."

Philadelphia gentleman and novelist Owen Wister assumes his western attire and attitude in this early 1890s portrait at Yellowstone. His novel, The Virginian, is believed to have been read by more Americans in the first half of the 20th century than any other work of fiction.

La Salle's Fine Arts Studio was also the birthplace of Mary's sister, Frances Anne (named after Fanny Kemble). Frances Anne was one of the founders of the Philadelphia Orchestra, served on its board of directors for half a century, and wrote its first history. Shyness was not Frances Anne's problem, and she once ruled the great (and imperious) conductor Leopold Stokowski "out of order" for suggesting that the Orchestra move from the Academy of Music to a new hall. Her Gimbel Award as the Outstanding Woman of Philadelphia honored her work with the orchestra, as well as her founding of the Society for the Preservation of Landmarks (to which Philadelphia owes the survival of part of its architectural heritage).

Two other children in this remarkable family of Wisters were born after 1876, when the William Rotch Wisters moved across Clarkson avenue to a newly-built house named "Wister." (It was at "Wister," within a frisbee's toss of where they met, that Owen Wister and Mary Channing Wister married on April 21, 1898. That house, demolished in 1956, stood opposite what is now "Building Blocks," La Salle's child care center.) The William Rotch Wisters' next daughter, Ella Wister Haines, wrote detective thrillers and directed public relations for Philadelphia Electric. The one son, John Casper Wister, became one of America's most prominent horticulturists.

Wister Hall, Wister Woods, Wister Street: Wister is inextricably woven into La Salle's consciousness. On October 1, 1994, Wister family descendants and friends will gather at La Salle University to celebrate the 250th birthday of their ancestral Philadelphia home, "Grumblethorpe." Once again, then, will merge the history of this family and the university built where so many remarkable Wisters lived.

Dr. Butler, who is professor and chair of the university's English Department, recently had his edition of Wordsworth's and Coleridge's Lyrical Ballads published by Cornell University Press.

FORTY YEARS AFTER...

The former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency reflects on the catastrophic events that have engulfed the world and analyzes the significance of the agreements he helped negotiate with states of the former Soviet Union to dismantle nuclear weapons

By Major General William F. Burns, USA, Ret., '54

Flakes of drifting snow whiten the landscape on this January morning changing the familiar patterns into stark whites and blacks. There is a beauty in the vision, but there is also a threat of unfamiliarity and bleakness. A promise of winter sports and the invigorating aspects of crisp, fresh outdoor exercise mix with the concerns of snow shoveling, transportation problems, and high heating bills.

The world, in the aftermath of the dramatic events of the past few years, faces a very similar picture. The familiarity of events of the past 40 years has been wiped away—not eroded in the usual manner of change but altered radically as in a revolution—and an uncertain, perhaps bleak, and challenging future awaits.

In the welter of Christmas mailings, I received a note from a classmate reminding me that the Class of 1954 would observe the 40th anniversary of its graduation from La Salle this spring. A bit earlier, I had been asked to make a contribution to this magazine. It seemed only fitting, then, that I reflect a bit on those 40 tumultuous years and how La Salle as an institution has affected and been affected by those times.

The month of September in the year 1950 had little to recommend it. American troops had been thrown back virtually into the sea in Korea. Draft calls had accelerated to the extent that few college students felt secure. Some of us had signed up, for whatever reasons, for the ROTC program commencing that month for the first time on campus. None of us could truly assess the full impact of this "police action" which quickly took on the dimensions of a war for those most likely to have to fight it. For us, the dramatic developments of the mid and late 1940s were familiar: the euphoric end of World War II, the fear of the Cold War and the atomic bomb as the decade ended, and the broad peacetime involvement of the United States in European affairs.

Maj. Gen. William F. Burns

The story of the Class of 1954 during its productive years in college and thereafter was formed by this environment and is to a great extent the story of that Cold War. Just as it was difficult for our parents to explain the rigors of the Great Depression, so it is difficult for us to articulate the feelings and meanings of the Cold War. All of us were affected by it one way or another.

Upon graduation, the Korean War was history. However, the aftermath of the conflict still lingers—today's headlines assert that "North Korea Admits UN Nuclear Inspectors" in the on-again off-again game of wits that has passed for an armistice on the Korean peninsula since our college days. In the middle 1950s, Korea was but one of several points of conflict in a troubled world. Two hundred thousand American troops were deployed in Western Europe to serve as a bulwark against Soviet aggression. The death of Stalin in 1953 had brought about a rethinking in Moscow, but the evidence that expansionism and imperialism had been discarded in that capital was weak, indeed.

The 40 years since graduation have passed in the glow of conflagrations in almost the entire world—Africa, the Middle East, Central America, North East Asia, South West Asia, Central Asia, Eastern Europe—to the point that we were often jaded by the sheer magnitude of the catastrophic events. The post-World War II hopes of central European states were dashed by the enlargement of the Soviet empire to include a buffer zone of client states forcibly included in the Russian sphere of influence. Hopes of much of Africa were not realized in the post-colonial era. Asia was tortured first by the Chinese civil war, then by post-colonial conflicts in South Asia, followed by attempts at imperial expansion on the Korean peninsula. Opportunities for further communist expansion occurred through the mishandling of the end of colonial rule in Indo-China. Latin America was drawn into the post-war turmoil—first by revolution in Cuba and then by continued attempts to expand Marxist thinking in that part of the Western Hemisphere.

The reaction to perceived attempts by Marxist states to expand and sympathy for communism among American intellectuals was strong and emotional in the early days. During our college tenure, "McCarthyism" was rampant. But this overreaction to the threat was partially explainable considering the unique kind of threat the nation faced. Even after the excesses of the McCarthy era were behind us, the national security policy of the United States and its allies was mesmerized by "The Threat." Indeed, military planning was threat-oriented because the threat was so real, so palpable, so identifiable. The Cold War made it easier for planners to describe needed force levels and force structures in terms of a clear-cut threat and to argue persuasively to the American public and its representatives in Congress that high levels of military expenditures were necessary. It also became easier, given "The Threat," to convince American interest groups that foreign alliances were useful and necessary, that foreign assistance—particularly military assistance—was in our security interests, and that a U.S. world leadership role was essential to contain the spread of imperial communism.

This led, in its turn, to a cycle of actions and reactions. It became difficult to determine "how much is enough" for defense. As technology evolved, the pursuit of ever more effective and costly weapons systems evolved with it. As one side in the Cold War developed new technologies of destruction, the other side did likewise with substantial justification but at ever increasing costs.

By the 1980s, religious leaders, notably the Catholic hierarchies of the U.S., France, and Germany, helped to clarify the moral issues, accepting with great reservation, the morality of nuclear deterrence as an interim step toward nuclear disarmament.

The issue of the moral utility of nuclear weapons was dealt with in this context. Incipient speculation of the middle 1940s considered the proper ways to handle the technology of nuclear destruction demonstrated all too vividly at Hiroshima and Nagasaki. During its few years of nuclear monopoly, the United States offered a key proposal for the international control of all nuclear weapons—the Baruch Plan. This concept, introduced in the late 1940s, called for the total internationalization of nuclear weapons under strict United Nations control. The plan was summarily rejected by the Soviet Union which worked secretly and rapidly to close the nuclear gap. I recall seeing a member of the Soviet delegation to the Intermediate Range Forces negotiations in Geneva in the early 1980s going into a rage when I confronted him with this factual challenge to Soviet "peace" propaganda. Many in the West, including some of our religious leaders, were taken in by such Soviet propaganda; this distorted and complicated much of the debate on ethical and moral questions surrounding the possession and use of nuclear weapons by the West as a deterrent to the growing Soviet capability to attack and destroy us.

During the same period, the United States began the arduous task of developing a strategic nuclear philosophy together with an analysis of options to deal with containment of the expansion of the Soviet empire that the world witnessed beginning in the late 1940s. The problem became acute after the Soviet Union demonstrated its ability to construct nuclear weapons in 1949. The nuclear arms race began, clouding the lives of our generation in many different ways.

The question of the morality of possession and use of nuclear weapons became frozen when the world was faced with several nuclear powers in the early 1950s. No longer did the United States have the luxury of offering to give up its monopoly of such weapons to international authority. There was little assurance, given the expansionist and imperialist policies of the Soviet Union, that the Soviets and their unwilling allies would come to credible agreement on international control. Development of a nuclear capability by Communist China and the gradual proliferation of nuclear technology among a few other nations over the next few decades further complicated the problem. The world recognized that nuclear weapons technology could not be uninvented. A politically, militarily, and morally acceptable security policy was required.

A concept of nuclear deterrence was formulated. It succeeded if we can accept the evidence of 40 years that the Soviet Union and the United States and their allies did not go to war conventionally with each other during that time nor did they use nuclear weapons against each other. "Limited wars" were fought through agents and third parties. The threat of the use of nuclear weapons always lurked in the background, coming forward only on a few occasions, notably during the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962.

Nuclear deterrence postulates that nations, acting rationally, will not act to destroy themselves. Therefore, nuclear weapons that are highly survivable under attack and highly accurate when launched will provide a high assurance of strategic stability — assurance that war will not take place. Whether it was the enormous destructive power threatened, the credibility of the threat in terms of a side's willingness to use nuclear weapons under certain circumstances, or the unwillingness of either side to actually turn to nuclear weapons as a viable option, we will probably never know. By the 1980s, however, the analysis of religious leaders, notably the Catholic hierarchies of the United States, France, and Germany, helped to clarify the moral issues, accepting, but with great reservation, the morality of nuclear deterrence as an interim step toward nuclear disarmament.

As the Class of 1954 began its freshman year at La Salle, the world possessed no more than a few hundred nuclear weapons, most in the hands of the United States. This number grew during our college years and after. Today some 50,000 nuclear weapons exist in the hands of not only the United States and the states of the former Soviet Union, but in the possession of at least another half-dozen states. The growth of nuclear arsenals highlights again the problem of nuclear proliferation and makes efforts at reducing dramatically the world stockpile a principal foreign policy goal of most nations today.

Technological development also contributed to the development and spread of conventional weapons of great accuracy and destructive power. In 1950, as we began our studies at La Salle, the Korean War was being fought essentially with conventional weapons of World War II vintage and design. Shortly before we reached our 40th anniversary of graduation, a major conventional war was fought in the Persian Gulf using technologies and weapons far beyond even the imagination of military planners of 40 years ago. Although these modern weapons technologies enabled the United States and its allies to fight an unimaginably short war with limited casualties, the successes themselves bring about their own problems. For example, the demand for such effective weapons has increased dramatically and advanced industrial countries are prepared to supply that demand. Thus, the problem of the proliferation of these weapons and these technologies raises questions of international stability which could become comparable to those raised by the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

The Revolution of 1989, in which the Soviet empire collapsed from within, may be considered by future historians as the crucial event of the 20th Century. The world needed a way to escape from the nuclear arms spiral and the deadly game of strategic nuclear deterrence. Perhaps we have been granted the Divine favor promised at Fatima so long ago.

Just as the snow quickly blankets the earth and transforms it into a land of stark contrasts, the collapse of communism in the Soviet Union, the destruction of the Berlin Wall, and the rise of democratic and free market ideas in the former Soviet orbit happened quickly and dramatically. The terrain is somehow familiar, but at the same time radically different. The challenge to the West in the years ahead is to prepare for the inevitable changes in our world as the snows of change recede. The euphoria of the fall and winter of 1989 has quickly changed to more sober contemplation. Will the United States continue to exercise leadership or will it fall victim to traditional American isolationism? What kind of world do we face in our final decades on this earth and what can we do now to shape that world in a predictable and favorable design? Will the Russian Federation survive its attempt at free market reform or will it sink back into chaos?

When reactionary forces attempted to overthrow the Gorbachev government in August of 1991, the world was reminded of the fragility of change in the former Soviet Union. The Bush Administration entered into serious discussions with the then-Soviet government to determine how the United States, and potentially its Allies in the North Atlantic Treaty, could contribute to stability in the Soviet Union. Events moved more quickly than diplomats, however. The Soviet Union collapsed and was replaced by the Commonwealth of Independent States as 1992 dawned. Boris Yeltsin succeeded Gorbachev as chief of state and government in the Russian Federation and the Commonwealth.

The United States Government recognized that one of the major causes of instability in the former Soviet Union would be the uncontrolled existence of a superabundance of nuclear weapons on that territory. There was convincing evidence that the Russian Federation and the former Soviet military leadership retained firm control over the stock of almost 30,000 nuclear weapons. Yet who could predict the future with certainty in uncertain times? Thus, the Administration sought ways to encourage the Russian leadership to dismantle excess nuclear weapons in a safe and secure manner and as quickly as possible. By mutual agreement, several areas of cooperation were identified. At the same time, through the good offices and intervention of Senators Sam Nunn and Richard Lugar, the President was authorized to divert from the Defense Department budget up to $400 million in 1992 to the safe and secure dismantlement of former Soviet nuclear weapons.

In early March 1992, I was called out of retirement to serve as special envoy to Russia and other "nuclear" states of the former Soviet Union to negotiate government-to-government agreements providing specific dismantlement assistance. During the following year, we negotiated agreements with Russia, Belorus, Kazahkstan, and Ukraine through which we committed ourselves to assist those states to divest themselves of nuclear weapons in accordance with international agreements. Russia remains the successor state to the residual nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet Union. Under the START II Treaty, for example, Russia will retain about 3500 strategic nuclear weapons. This requires the elimination in the next few years of tens of thousands of nuclear warheads, a daunting task given safety and security considerations. Under terms of agreements among the states, the other three former Soviet republics have agreed to a non-nuclear status under the Non-Proliferation Treaty and will send their nuclear warheads to Russia for elimination.

In addition to these basic intergovernmental agreements, implementing agreements have been and are being negotiated and put into effect specifying in detail the assistance the United States is committed to provide. The first assistance was provided in early 1993. Subsequent to the initial legislation, 1993 and 1994 appropriations contained language providing additional annual increments of $400 million for "Nunn-Lugar" assistance and substantially expanded the nature of the assistance to be offered.

It is good to remember that history does not record a similar instance of this kind of assistance. For something more than $1 billion, the American taxpayer contributes directly to stability in an area of the world that, if it should fall apart, could directly threaten the United States with an overwhelming number of nuclear weapons. The American taxpayer also has an opportunity to finance an interaction between the defense communities of both Cold War superpowers that can only contribute to stability. The Russian Federation receives assistance to speed dismantlement in a safe and secure manner. I doubt that the job could be done speedily and safely without U.S. help.

Some of the assistance being provided is rather prosaic; some is special, and some is original. For example:

—Our Russian interlocutors indicated that they needed specialized equipment to respond to a nuclear accident or incident caused in the process of removal of nuclear weapons from launch sites to dismantlement areas. We brought a team of Russian experts to Sandia National Laboratories near Albuquerque in April 1992 and demonstrated what equipment we used and how we responded to such accidents. The Russians seemed impressed with our openness and asked for a specific array of equipment valued at several millions of dollars. Most of this equipment — ranging from protective clothing and "jaws of life" used by local fire departments to sophisticated nuclear monitoring equipment — has been delivered and is in use today.

—The Russian side indicated that they had a need to upgrade special railroad cars used by them to transport nuclear weapons. We agreed on an upgrade package. A Russian railroad car was shipped to Sandia Laboratories last year and was outfitted with a trial upgrade package. This package is now being fabricated in the United States for shipment to Russia and installation on 100 railroad cars.

—There appeared to be a shortage of transport and storage containers for nuclear materials developing after the first year or two of the dismantlement effort. Technical discussions between the sides developed an agreed design for a container meeting stringent safety standards. In the process of the design, U.S. experts were able to produce a superior container for about one-quarter of the cost of the originally-proposed Russian design. Delivery of these containers has begun. A minimum of 10,000 containers will be fabricated for Russia.

—Because of the threat of terrorism in a politically and economically volatile area, the Russian Government also requested assistance in protecting nuclear weapons and material when it was being transshipped from truck to train or train to a temporary storage facility. To accomplish this, the United States is providing several hundred sets of flexible protective blankets capable of resisting small arms fire.

—A major concern of the Russian Government was the storage of nuclear material awaiting disposition. The environmental and proliferation problems involved in disposing of over five hundred tons of former Soviet nuclear material from dismantled weapons are enormous. They asked us for assistance in constructing a suitable, high-technology storage facility. You can imagine the reserve with which we old Cold Warriors addressed this request! Even the idea of contributing to a safe and secure storage facility for Soviet nuclear weapons would have been unthinkable as late as 1990. But the United States has participated in assisting the Russian authorities to design such a facility and, in 1993, the United States committed itself to provide significant construction assistance.

General Burns taught a special political science course about the demise of the Soviet Union at La Salle last spring.

—Another area of interest was that of establishing a system of materials control and accountability for nuclear weapons material. The Russian Government identified the kinds of assistance which would be most useful and we agreed to help.

—Perhaps the key area for discussion has been the ultimate disposition of the nuclear material itself. We negotiated in late 1992 and early 1993 an agreement with the Russian Ministry of Atomic Energy. This agreement provides that the United States will buy and the Russian Federation will sell the entire uranium output of the dismantlement process. In turn, the United States will meter this uranium, reprocessed and diluted to a percentage usable in power plants, into the world market in such a way as to prevent major market perturbations. The cost to the American taxpayer will be nil in the long run since the power users will eventually pay all the costs involved.

While we negotiated the seven agreements discussed above, we identified still two more areas of fruitful cooperation:

—It became evident that the world system of export controls on strategic and sensitive materials and technology needed fixing. The system evolved from a beginning in the 1940s aimed at thwarting Soviet attempts to gain materials and technology clandestinely. At the height of the Cold War, lists upon lists of restricted items and a complex system were in place. With the demise of the Soviet Union, the continuing concern was that of proliferation of the means of mass destruction such as nuclear materials and chemical weapons precursors. The Russian Federation was equally concerned about such proliferation and asked for our assistance. A study developed a basis for assistance and the program has begun. In addition, the world-wide system of export controls has been drastically revised under U.S. and Russian leadership.

—Finally, it was evident that assistance would be useful in dismantling the delivery systems — the missiles used to launch the warheads — as well as the nuclear weapons themselves. After intensive discussions in Moscow and other capitals, we developed a program of assistance to help Russia, Kazakhstan, and Ukraine dispose of these unneeded systems.

This example of one of several programs initiated to assist states of the former Soviet Union to achieve or regain lost freedoms illustrates the dramatic turn of events since the collapse of the USSR. It shows a compassionate but still self-interested United States extending the hand of friendship to a recent enemy. While this writer believes that the United States could have moved more swiftly to provide assistance and thus to eliminate the threat to stability as quickly as possible, the fact that it has moved in this direction at all is noteworthy. Stability is fragile in the former Soviet empire and it must be nurtured and guarded by those peoples themselves as well as encouraged by the international community.

The history of La Salle's Class of 1954 reflects the events just described. Some of us have had direct involvement while others have made indirect but important contributions. Several of us have been school teachers over the years with an obligation to explain the devious course of Cold War events to our students. Others have served for longer or shorter periods in military service, facing the issues of nuclear and conventional deterrence at a very practical level. Still others have contributed to the astounding growth of science and technology of the past four decades. And, I believe, our contributions have been positive.

One thing that we all have shared is the LaSallian tradition. It is a tradition of worth, of service, of practical education, and Christian purpose.

Worth in the sense that La Salle students generally come from the less privileged of the society of the day. But each student is treated as one of ultimate potential and is given the opportunity to realize that potential.

The tradition of service in the Christian Schools is imbued in the Christian Brothers, themselves. We can each name an example and role-model from our student days. The idea of contributing to others' moral and physical welfare was woven into the fabric of our education. One cannot forget the various extra-curricular activities as well as Brother Augustine's sociology classes, for starters.

Our education involved a mix of mind-stretchers and practical subjects. Dan Rodden's lectures on art, fiction, and poetry, and our required classes in philosophy and religion, mixed with accounting, economics, and education courses provided a thought-provoking but practical education.

The Catholicism of the overwhelming majority of students was encouraged and nurtured in active and passive ways. Brother Robert of Mary challenged us to not only read but understand the two-volume Teaching of the Catholic Church and Father Heath was always available in the chaplain's office. It is only in the hidden recesses of the hearts of the members of our class that we can discern the true value and impact of our LaSallian education. Observation of externals, however, would lead one to believe that the education "took" and that our contribution to the moral stability that our country needed during the past 40 years has been notable.

One of the enduring legacies of the early 1950s has been the ROTC program. Founded as the Class of 1954 enrolled, the program graduated several generations of army officers during the Cold War. Coincidentally, the program was disestablished at a number of institutions—including La Salle—by the Army, its work apparently accomplished, as the Cold War ended. ROTC not only provided financial benefits for those enrolled but it brought to the campus another dimension of national life. Since a large number of colleges and universities under Catholic auspices began ROTC programs in the early 1950s along with La Salle, the influence of the educational style and moral values of such institutions on the military cannot be underestimated.

Forty years is a long time — a little more than half a lifetime by modern actuarial calculations. A product of the Depression Generation, we of the Cold War Generation have experienced a unique set of circumstances and have coped with them in varied ways. As a group, we have contributed to stability in thought, in practice, and in domestic and international affairs.

As the snow continues to fall, the clouds appear to be thinning. This snowfall is also replicated today in many parts of the former Soviet Union. From the snowy streets of St. Petersburg and Moscow to the plains of Siberia facing our state of Alaska, Russian citizens ponder their future. The end of the Cold War and our 40th reunion coincide to usher in a new world of potential opportunities for both our peoples. As we prayed "for the conversion of Russia" in our youth at the end of the old Latin Mass, let us remember today to pray that these future opportunities be realized.

The Honorable William F. Burns, currently a judge of the Court of Judicial Discipline of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, retired from the U.S. Army in 1988 after almost 34 years of service. Upon retirement, he was appointed director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency by President Reagan. In 1992, he was named special envoy to Russia and other states of the former Soviet Union to negotiate terms of U.S. assistance for the dismantlement of former Soviet nuclear weapons. He is a member of La Salle University's Board of Trustees.

What is Great Teaching?

"We Must Communicate Our Interest In Teaching Them, In Mentoring Them; We Must Enthusiastically Promote Our Willingness To Engage Them"

Brother President Joseph F. Burke delivers keynote address at Temple University's Great Teachers award ceremony.

Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D. delivered the keynote address at the annual Great Teachers Award Ceremony at Temple University on Nov. 22. Five Temple faculty members were honored with each recipient receiving a $10,000 cash prize, believed to be the largest awarded by a college or university for excellence in teaching. Brother Burke's remarks included the following:

"Two years ago I traveled to Harrisburg for the annual meeting of PACU — Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities. The theme of the meeting was: THE RETURN TO TEACHING. Imagine it—a congress of college and university presidents discussing the return to teaching. When did we leave it? Not long after that meeting there was an issue of Policy Perspectives from the Pew Higher Education Research Program. In that document we were told that throughout higher education, faculty have abandoned their departments, their students, and their roles as teachers and mentors. They have done so out of loyalty to their disciplines and in compliance with administrative directives about the supremacy of research and the importance of achieving regional and national prominence.

"No institution, yours or my own, is immune to the teaching/research tension, but certainly today we celebrate women and men who have found the balance, found a way to inform their teaching with their research, and vis a versa. These are, as the program says, Great Teachers!

"But what is great teaching? I come from an educational institution, one of hundreds throughout the world, named for a 17th Century French Catholic priest, John Baptist De La Salle, who revolutionized French education for the poor. In doing so, he established a religious order of men known as the Christian Brothers whose 10,000 members conduct schools, colleges, and universities in over sixty countries. If there is one thing I have learned as a member of that worldwide family of Christian Brothers it is that teaching is not enough. Indeed, I would argue that any reasonably bright, modestly motivated person with some information, skill, or ideas to convey, can teach successfully enough to have the learners pass tests.

"But our task is to do more—to ignite the mind to learning for its own sake, to face down a culture increasingly addicted to the MTV style of quick bites of sound and images, to stand against ethical and moral ambivalence, and to foster a new, unbiased look at nature, humankind, and personal responsibility. I have no doubt that this fuller understanding of teaching is what you, our honorees, have accomplished. For you, teaching is an investment of self that keeps you always learning and doing as a scholar, keeps you always sharing your learning and insight with others.

"There is, in my view, an essential complement to teaching that is increasingly important in our own time. I am talking about mentoring. Most of us who are academics have benefited from mentors, some in college, others later in graduate school. I believe that it is imperative that our lives be open invitations to our students to join us in the mentor relationship. We do so knowing that there will only be a minority of students who wish to engage us in this relationship, but in my experience, this is where much of the real action is in our lives as teachers.

"The mentor relationship is not one of dependency—we've all been there, and it is draining rather than sustaining. Rather, to mentor a student is to share a love of one respective discipline, to build mutual respect of each other's experiences and insights, and to, in the end, launch a citizen who delights in new ideas, thinks rather than merely absorbs, and who acts rather than reacts. In short, we help to foster new lifelong learners, teachers, and mentors, regardless of the professions our students select.

"To be this sort of mentor is no easy task. Many in this generation of students are prone to passivity, and many of them are downright shy in adult society. Often our task as teachers and mentors resembles prodding rather than illuminating, and in our frustration, it is easy to fall prey to the "good old days" syndrome in which selective recall paints an era of near perfect students who hung on our every word and, in the time before grade inflation, earned honest Cs uncomplainingly. The truth be told, there are differences among generations of students, but human nature has not changed. The difference, I believe, is in the competition we face for their minds. Some would argue that we are not the equal of the mass culture available through the media, and that the professor/mentor in the classroom and in the faculty office is as much of an anachronism as the symphony orchestra.

"I simply do not believe that—about either, I might add. Nothing touches a human being more than another human being. We are up to doing that only if we curtail our cynicism and engage students head on. It is not enough to be "available." We must communicate our interest in teaching them, in mentoring them; we must enthusiastically promote our willingness to engage them, and we must do it without fear of being rejected or, worse, being ignored or patronized.

"In all of this, of course, I'm preaching to the choir. And, this choir has reason to abandon hope. We all know that what we do as teachers and mentors is undervalued in our society. We have been told that we are underworked and overpaid, and this by people who have never been to bluebook heaven on a Saturday afternoon. Undervalued or not, we have a key role to play in ending violence, greed, and intolerance in our society. That we do so without adequate recognition is unfortunate, but at moments like these we can take comfort in each other, knowing that millions of lives are more meaningful and rich because of the efforts of "great teachers" like the ones we honor today."

La Salle & Gratz To Train Special Needs Education Teachers in Historic Agreement Between Catholic and Jewish Institutions

Brother President Joseph F. Burke (seated, right) and Dr. Gary S. Schiff, president of Gratz College, sign historic agreement to cooperate in the graduate school training of teachers and administrators in the growing field of special needs education. Also participating were (standing, from left): Dr. Gary Clabaugh, chairman of La Salle's Graduate Education Department; Dr. Marsha Bryan Edelman, dean for academic affairs at Gratz; Dr. Barbara Millard, dean of arts and sciences at La Salle, and Dr. Robert Vogel, who will serve as La Salle's liaison for the program.

In what is believed to be an unprecedented accord, La Salle University and Gratz College, the nation's oldest independent college of Jewish studies, will cooperate in the training of teachers and administrators in the growing field of special needs education.

The historic agreement—believed to be the first cooperative educational agreement between a Catholic and Jewish institution— was recently finalized by La Salle University's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., and Dr. Gary S. Schiff, the president of Gratz.

Beginning next Fall, Gratz and La Salle—located ten minutes apart in Melrose Park, Pa., and northwest Philadelphia, respectively, will share their resources and accept each other's matriculated graduate students without additional entrance requirements.

Special needs education refers to educating those with various mental, emotional and/or physical disabilities that hamper normal learning processes and/or prevent inclusion in regular classroom settings.

"Students enrolled in the new special needs education concentration in Gratz's M.A. in Jewish Education program will take courses in special education at La Salle that are not available at Gratz," explained Dr. Marsha Bryan Edelman, dean for academic affairs at Gratz.

"La Salle students, on the other hand, will be eligible to satisfy elective courses for their M.A. in Education at Gratz," added Dr. Barbara Millard, dean of arts and sciences at La Salle.

La Salle officials have also agreed to insure that the new courses in Jewish special needs education being developed at Gratz contain the appropriate elements that would enable Gratz students to complete the additional course work at La Salle necessary to obtain Commonwealth of Pennsylvania certification in the field.

The new Gratz program in Jewish special needs education, the first of its type in the country, was made possible by a $100,000 grant from the Covenant Foundation of New York, a recently established charity interested in fostering creativity in Jewish education. Dr. Sharon Schanzer, a member of Gratz's faculty, is in charge of the program. Dr. Robert Vogel, associate professor of education at La Salle, is serving as liaison.

According to Vogel, there is a tremendous shortage of teachers nationally who are trained to deal with students who have special learning needs.

"The need for such teachers is tremendous, not just in Jewish schools but in all schools," Vogel explained. "Gratz has identified that many of the children who are either in Hebrew schools or in Jewish day schools are also coming to school with special learning needs. So the goal is to better equip teachers with the tools to be more effective with these special needs children."

Vogel added that La Salle's education program has become very successful in developing new strategies that meet the needs of a wide, diverse population of learners.

"One of the strongest points of La Salle's undergraduate and graduate programs is that we work from a developmentally-oriented model in which we train all our teachers to look at all students as individuals who have unique learning needs. This includes those labeled special needs learner as well as those who are not so labeled."

La Salle and Gratz have also agreed to be mutually receptive to the cross-institutional registration of qualified graduate and undergraduate students matriculated in all programs of study.

Gratz was founded in 1895 as the first Hebrew teacher's college in the Americas. Today it is a comprehensive college of Judaic, Hebraic and related Middle East studies, offering master's, bachelor's, certificate, continuing education, and secondary education programs.

In addition to undergraduate programs in the Schools of Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Continuing Education, and Nursing, La Salle offers nine master's degree programs.

Fifth Annual Warren E. Smith Award Presented at African American Alumni Reception

La Salle University Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., and Alumni Association President Maria Tucker-Cusick (center) presented the 1994 Warren E. Smith, M.D. Award to Millicent J. Carvalho (right) during the Fifth Annual African American Alumni Reception on February 25 in the Ballroom on campus.

Carvalho, who has served as director of La Salle's Urban Studies and Community Services Center since 1988, is the first woman to receive this award. She was chosen for this honor because she is "an African American La Salle University graduate who has achieved success in her profession, has demonstrated a commitment to traditional La Sallian values, has made significant contributions to the community, and serves as an outstanding example to all La Salle students."

A native of Philadelphia, Carvalho also served as the executive director of the Children Youth and Family Council of the Delaware Valley prior to coming to La Salle. There she coordinated the activities of a coalition of 28 private non-profit child welfare agencies.

La Salle's African American Alumni Reception brings together current African American students with alumni and faculty to network, renew friendships and share information.

The Award is named for the late Warren E. Smith, M.D., a 1954 La Salle graduate who had served the university for many years as a psychiatrist in the university's Counseling Center.

Minor Program Added in Environmental Studies

La Salle University is now offering a minor program in Environmental Studies that has been designed both for science and non-science students, it was announced by Dr. Henry A. Bart, chairman of the university's Geology and Physics Department.

Six academic courses are required for the program that began in the Spring 1994 semester, stressing the interdisciplinary nature of environmental issues.

Students not majoring in science, for example, take three foundation courses in biology, chemistry, and geology. Science majors will be encouraged to take courses like environmental economics, risk management and assessment, and sociology of cities.

Dr. Bart said that the interdisciplinary emphasis is important because an understanding of the environment also involves an understanding of such related issues as economics, psychology, sociology, and political science.

"The intention of the program is not to create a scientist out of an accounting major," explained Bart, "but it's to give people a common understanding about such environmental issues as toxic waste cleanup, land-use planning, and consumption of resources."

The Environmental Studies minor is expected to attract—and increase the employment prospects of— students majoring in all of the liberal arts and business courses such as accounting, communication, English, history, and political science, as well as the sciences.

"A geology major with an environmental studies background is worth more on the job market," explained Bart. "And very often business graduates wind up working for environmental companies. A minor such as the one offered at La Salle makes them much stronger candidates for such a position."

Christian and Lynch Elected to University's Board of Trustees

Christian

Lynch

Two new members have been elected to La Salle University's Board of Trustees, it was announced by Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.

The new trustees are Robert J. Christian, president and chief investment officer, PNC Investment Management & Research, and James J. Lynch, president of Continental Bank.

"We are extremely fortunate to be able to rely on the expertise of two such highly respected members of the financial community," said John J. Shea, president and chief executive officer of Spiegel, Inc., and chairman of La Salle University's Board of Trustees.

"Both Mr. Christian and Mr. Lynch bring to the table an impressive portfolio of experience in areas such as economics, marketing, and investment strategy that are so vital to the future of independent higher education."

Christian joined the Trust and Investment Division of Provident National Bank as an economic analyst in 1976. Two years later he was appointed chief economist, a position he held until 1985 when he became director of economic and fixed income analysis. In 1991, he was named director of investment strategy.

When PNC consolidated and enlarged its investment efforts in 1991, Christian was named to his present position as head of PNC Investment Management & Research.

A 1971 graduate of La Salle University where he majored in economics, Christian earned a master's degree from the University of Delaware. He also spent two years with the Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia where his prime focus was on monetary policy and its effects on economic activity.

Lynch, who also graduated from La Salle University in 1971 with a degree in marketing, spent five years in various commercial loan assignments with First Pennsylvania Bank where he advanced to assistant vice president.

Lynch joined Continental Bank as assistant vice president in 1976 and held various lending assignments in the bank's Commercial Lending Group until advancing to executive vice president and senior lending officer in 1983. Three years later, he was promoted to vice chairman of the Board.

In 1991, Lynch returned to the Commercial Banking Group with responsibility for commercial lending and real estate. He was named president in 1992.

Independence Foundation Awards $865,964 to School of Nursing

The Independence Foundation of Philadelphia has awarded a pair of grants totaling $865,964 to La Salle University's School of Nursing to endow a professorship and to support its Neighborhood Nursing Center.

A $500,000 grant will endow The Independence Foundation Chair in Nursing. A two year, $365,964 grant will expand health promotion and disease prevention services to the families of northwest Philadelphia.

Dr. Gloria Donnelly, dean of La Salle's School of Nursing, said that the professorship will strengthen the university's commitment to community based nursing education by supporting the work of a faculty member involved in both primary care practice, teaching, and in scholarly work at the Neighborhood Nursing Center.

"The potential benefits of this effort," explained Donnelly, "will be the refinement of the notion of quality community health care, the improvement of the health care status of the residents of northwest Philadelphia, and the attraction of culturally diverse youth from the surrounding community to health and other service oriented careers."

The Independence Foundation Chair in Nursing will also strengthen La Salle's collaborative educational arrangements, particularly with other inner city nursing programs and with the Medical College of Pennsylvania community education program for medical students.

Donnelly added that the $365,964 grant will enable La Salle's Neighborhood Nursing Center to increase the number of families who receive care, strengthen the linkages between community need, service delivery and the education of nursing students. "It will also insure that this innovative model for community based, nurse managed primary care delivery will be replicated by other nursing programs."

This grant includes two paid summer internships for faculty from urban nursing programs who wish to learn the workings of a nurse managed center in an inner city community as well as its potential as an interdisciplinary practice site for nursing education. The first internships will be offered this summer.

La Salle University's Neighborhood Nursing Center opened in June, 1991. It provides services from two sites with funding provided by a special projects grant from the Department of Health and Human Services, Public Health Service, Division of Nursing as well as support from La Salle University and a contract with the city of Philadelphia Department of Health. It is also an immunization site and a lead poisoning screening site for the City of Philadelphia and served as the model for the city's Summer of Service ICARE Program to involve college students in community service focusing on the immunization of children.

The two grants to La Salle University's School of Nursing are part of approximately $5.8 million in funding for nursing education and practice that has recently been awarded by the Independence Foundation to nursing schools and departments located predominantly in the Delaware Valley.

"We believe strongly that our investments in the field of nursing will have a valuable impact on the quality of health care services in Philadelphia and throughout Pennsylvania," said Theodore K. Warner, Jr., the president of the Board of Directors of the Independence Foundation. "Nursing has a vital role to play in easing our nation's health care crisis."

President's Associates Adds Eleven Members

Eleven men and women who have distinguished themselves in the corporate, educational, government, or legal professions have been appointed to La Salle University's Council of President's Associates, it was announced by Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.

The new members, who will serve three year terms until 1996, are: Kathleen Burns, '75 MBA, treasurer, ALCO Standard Corp., Valley Forge; Joseph H. Cloran, '61, vice president, American Express Co., New York City; Joseph A. Coffey, Jr., Esq., '64, partner, Coffey & Kaye, Bala Cynwyd, and Michael B. Costello, '80 MBA, vice president, Shared Medical Systems, Malvern.

Also: June C. Douglas, '90 MBA, manager, Cromby Generating Station, Peco Energy Co, Phoenixville; John F. Kent, Esq., '72, partner, Marks, Kent and O'Neill, Philadelphia; Steven J. Madonna, Esq., '64, assistant attorney general, State of New Jersey, and Richard V. McCarron, Jr., '66, superintendent of schools, Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

Also: Francis T. McGettigan, '77, partner, KPMG Peat Marwick, Harrisburg; Thomas N. Pappas, '70, senior vice president, National Sales and Marketing Dept., Johnson & Higgins, Philadelphia, and Robert T. Wright, Sr., '60, secretary-treasurer, Reading Foundry and Supply.

La Salle's Council of President's Associates is comprised of 36 members who serve as a pool of resource persons for various university projects. They advise La Salle's president and other key administrators in such areas as curriculum development, liaison with professional schools, fine arts, athletics, and student career placement.

La Salle Offers Unique Graduate Program in Computer Information Focusing on PCs

La Salle University has developed a new Masters of Arts in Computer Information Science (CIS) program, the first in the Philadelphia area to focus on the use of the personal computer (PC).

Created as a result of today's economic downsizing and the evolution of the economy from a manufacturing base to an information base, this unique part time program is available at La Salle's main campus.

"It is really unlike any other computer science program out there," explained Dr. Charles Hofmann, III, associate professor of mathematical science at La Salle and the director of the new M.A. Program. "We saw a weakness in other computer science programs in that they were focusing predominantly on mainframe technology, neglecting the fastest growing segment of information technology — the personal computer."

La Salle's MA in CIS provides a forum for the study, investigation, discussion, and presentation of how personal computers can be used to improve an individual's productivity and to enhance departmental and corporate electronic based communication.

The core of the Program is built on applications, productivity tools and end user services. The focus is information: locating, capturing, ensuring, sharing, evaluating and presenting information. Quantitative talents, people skills and extensive hands on experiences will also be developed.

According to Steve Longo, director of academic computing at La Salle and one of the creators of the MA in CIS Program, it also encourages active student involvement and collaborative learning.

"We don't plan to teach, we plan to discuss," Longo said. "We feel that many students coming into this have experience and we want them to share that knowledge. Every night we'll bring up a topic and two or three students will make a short presentation and we'll spend time discussing how it is relative to the course. What we're trying to do is make the students have a dialogue, communicate. It is a service department and in a service department you must be able to communicate as well as listen. As a manager you also need to be a good listener."

In addition to participating in class discussions, students will evaluate new software packages, make formal classroom presentations and do independent projects.

The Program prepares individuals for end-user computing services by addressing both technical challenges and management skills in various size businesses therefore making students competitive in contemporary and future work places.

A MATURING PROCESS

Both the men and women pulled off major upsets during the 1993-94 season, but for the most part they were a year away from becoming "seasoned veterans"

By Bob Vetrone and Colleen Corace
Assistant Sports Information Directors

Jasper Van Teeseling (#50), the Explorers only player over 6-7, goes up for a shot during the heartbreaking loss to St. Joseph's that was decided by a goaltending call at the final buzzer. The 6-10 center is from Alkmaar, Netherlands.

When does youth begin to mature. . .when does an inexperienced player become "a seasoned veteran?"

La Salle University basketball coaches John Miller and Speedy Morris had first-hand knowledge of this during the 1993-94 season, and their reactions were strikingly similar.

By mid-season, both had shunned the use of the term "young team." As Miller put it after his women's team had posted an exceptional 85-75 victory at Notre Dame on Feb. 17, "someone mentioned that at one time, we had five freshmen on the floor. I didn't notice because I wasn't thinking of them as freshmen. It says a lot for the development of our young people."

Morris opened the men's season with two freshmen in the starting frontcourt - Derick Newton and Netherlands product Jasper Van Teeseling. Toss in Romaine Haywood, a sophomore who sat out last season as a Prop 48, and you have a frontline without one game of varsity experience.

Thrust them into games against such opponents as Illinois, Colorado and Princeton - and that was before Christmas — and inexperience becomes a problem. In fact, in his second varsity game, Van Teeseling, 6-10 and 220, was pitted against Illinois NBA lottery-pick possibility Deon Thomas (6-9, 232) and Junior College All-American transfer Shelly Clark (6-9, 260).

After that mismatch, Van Teeseling had one reaction. As he told coach Morris: "I've got a lot to learn."

As the season progressed, so did Van Teeseling, holding his own against some of the better and experienced centers on the Explorers' rugged schedule.

Figures of six points and five rebounds per game, show two contrasting things — how far he has come and how far he has to go.

"Jasper needs to bulk up his upper body," said coach Morris, "if he's going to compete with some of the big men we face. He knows he has to and we know he will."

Women's coach John Miller was able to count on two seniors, Mary Heller and Lisa Auman, but his roster contained no juniors, three sophomores (including Allyson Blue who didn't play last season because of a knee injury and Marci Willis, who played only half a season).

But Miller had added five freshmen and they quickly blended in with the returnees and one of them, Chrissie Donahue, became a starting forward and posted impressive numbers, averag-

Jennifer Cole, '93, became the first women athlete from La Salle to have her uniform number retired when ceremonies were held at Philadelphia's Civic Center on Jan. 12. A two-time Academic All America, Jenn is the basketball team's all-time leader in four offensive categories including points scored and game average.

ing 13 points and seven rebounds a game. Probably the most impressive was the one which showed she led the team in minutes played, at about 28 a game.

"Chrissie is an intelligent player," Miller said. "Not only does she know her role but she knows what the other four players on the floor are supposed to be doing. It's just as though she were a coach on the court."

As for the season itself, the win at Notre Dame was the 16th and equalled last year's total. With an 83-70 win over Butler in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference Tournament before bowing to Notre Dame in the semifinals, the women finished at 19-9.

Miller summed it up thusly: "I'm ecstatic over what this team accomplished."

While Miller envisions great futures for his young group, a trio of veterans were prominent in many of the Explorers' notable victories.

Senior Mary Heller averaged 15 points and eight rebounds a game, even though her playing time had to be rationed because of lingering leg injuries. Fellow senior Lisa Auman contributed eight points and three rebounds a game and sophomore Lori Sparling was superb in spots, especially with a 25-point effort at Notre Dame.

The same can be said of Morris' holdovers on the men squad, especially the junior guard tandem of Kareem Townes (25 points a game) and Paul Burke (14 points and six assists).

Sophomores Terquin Mott and Quincy Lee provided back-up strength, Mott especially displaying top form with a 26-point, six-rebound game in a two-point loss to St. Joseph's and Lee tossing in 22 valuable points in a reserve role when the Explorers upset Evansville, 65-63, on the Aces' home court. La Salle also upset Lefty Driesell's James Madison quintet, an NCAA Tournament entry, and lost to four other NCAA "Sweet 64" contenders.

As the season wore on, and the newcomers more easily fit into the flow, the future - as it pertained to next season - - looked brighter for the La Salle men, although they stumbled to four straight losses at season's end to finish with an 11-16 record.

Brother Michael J. McGinniss Named President of Christian Brothers University in Memphis

Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, the chairman of La Salle's Religion Department and vice president of the university Corporation, has been appointed the 19th president of Christian Brothers University, the oldest degree granting university in Memphis, Tenn.

Brother McGinniss, who will assume his new position on July 1, is a professor of religion at La Salle. He is executive secretary of the Catholic Theological Society of America and was awarded a Lindback Foundation Award for distinguished teaching in 1992.

A Maxima cum Laude graduate from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in English, Brother McGinniss earned master's and doctor of philosophy degrees from the University of Notre Dame.

"Losing Michael is a mixed blessing," said La Salle's Brother President Joseph Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D. "He has provided excellent leadership to our Religion Department and has been a strong, helpful participant on La Salle's Board of Trustees as vice president of the corporation. He has served with distinction in all of his professional activities—everything from our Faculty Senate to such nationally-renowned organizations as the Catholic Theological Society of America.

"As someone who is certainly respected by La Salle's faculty and administration, we will not only miss his expertise, we will also miss Michael as a person. But at the same time we are very proud of him. He is a La Salle alumnus and he's been a highly-valued member of the university community for a long time. It speaks a great deal about our institution that one of our own has been selected for such an important position as the presidency of Christian Brothers University.

"I think it's a good fit. Michael is taking on a significant challenge at an institution that has many assets and a mission similar to our own. But he certainly has the energy and talent to meet that responsibility."

Brother Gene Graham, Former Producer of La Salle Music Theatre, Dies in California While on Sabbatical Brother Eugene R. Graham, F.S.C., the former producer of La Salle University's popular Music Theatre, died on Jan. 2 at St. Vincent's Medical Center, in Los Angeles. He was 69 and had been spending the 1993-94 academic year on sabbatical at the Christian Brothers novitiate outside of San Francisco.

Before going on sabbatical, Brother Graham had been director of the La Salle community of the Brothers of the Christian Schools. He had been a member of the Christian Brothers for more than 50 years.

One of Brother Gene Graham's proudest moments came in 1985 when he helped present the President's Medal to composer Cy Coleman, one of his closest friends, on opening night of the La Salle Music Theatre production of SWEET CHARITY.

Brother Graham, a native of Philadelphia, enjoyed the unusual distinction of combining his love and talent for dramatic arts with his academic career and religious vocation. He was producer of La Salle Music Theatre from 1978 until the theatre was discontinued by the university in 1988.

Brother Graham joined La Salle University's Development Office staff in 1977 and served until 1981 as director of the annual fund. He was also director of the university's undergraduate theatrical group, The Masque, for seven years and he taught in the university's English Department.

In addition to his theatrical career that spanned almost 40 years and included directing such future stars as John Travolta, Brother Graham served as a high school principal and a college administrator and teacher.

Brother Graham was an assistant to producer James Lipton at the nationally televised 1977 Inaugural gala for President Carter at the Kennedy Center, in Washington, D.C., and at the 1976 Star Spangled gala for the New York Library for the Performing Arts at the Metropolitan Opera House. Brother Graham and Lipton also worked on a television special commemorating Bob Hope's 75th birthday in 1978.

Brother Graham directed summer theatre productions at the Surflight Theatre, Long Beach Island, N.J., and dinner theatre shows at the Club Bene, Morgan, N.J., in 1971-72. At Bene, he directed 16 year-old John Travolta in his first professional part as "Hugo" in BYE BYE BIRDIE.

A graduate of Philadelphia's West Catholic High School, Brother Graham earned a bachelor's degree in English at La Salle University in 1947 and a master's degree in secondary education at the University of Pittsburgh in 1953. He also studied dramatics at Johns Hopkins, Columbia, NYU, and The Catholic University of America.

Brother Graham was president of St. John's College High School, in Washington, D.C., from 1961-67, and principal of O'Connell High School, in Arlington, Va., in 1960. He also taught and directed dramatics at St. John's from 1946-54 and at Philadelphia's La Salle College High School from 1967-77.

Brother Graham is survived by two brothers, George, of Philadelphia, and John, of Fresno, Calif., and a sister, Mrs. Catherine O'Reilly, of Allentown, Pa. ■

Kissing Hands and Shaking Babies

Brother President Joseph Burke performs one of his favorite tasks: speaking to the alumni.

Reflections After Two Years as President of La Salle

By Brother Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.,'68

In his film, The History of the World, Part 1, Mel Brooks immortalized the line, "It's good to be the king." Well, most of the time it's good to be the president. One gets to meet many of the political, business, and cultural leaders in the metropolitan Philadelphia area and beyond, there's plenty of travel to exotic places like Indianapolis and Detroit, and then there are the tee shirts and umbrellas. Yes, presidents get lots of tee shirts and umbrellas. On university campuses these days, every event merits a souvenir tee shirt, and the X-large one usually is given to the president to thank him for attending the event, or in some cases, for staying away from the event. And umbrellas come from businesses who serve the University: from heating and plumbing companies to investment bankers. (Let no one misunderstand. I love getting the tee shirts, and when I'm not in a suit, I don some of my most colorful tee shirts.)

As the title of this essay suggests, a good deal of my job is social. On campus one of my major social obligation is welcoming people. All kinds of people, from various groupings of students, parents, staff, and faculty to visitors from around the city and around the world: welcome, welcome, welcome. Off campus, my job is to "promote the University." How do I do that? I serve on eight boards of directors/trustees, mingle at numerous social, political, and religious gatherings, and I attend enough lunches and dinners to qualify for a full tuition grant from Jenny Craig. "On the road," I have met hundreds of

A view of College Hall from the Quadrangle.

La Salle grads individually or at reunions across the country, and truth be told, that is one of the best parts of the job. It is a pleasure to tell alums about what has changed on campus and how we have gradually evolved into a comprehensive university of increasing national prominence but have lost none of the warmth, accessibility, and respect for the individual that have traditionally characterized Christian Brothers' schools. And it is reassuring to hear the alumni express their positive recollections about their education and their assurances of support for La Salle.

"In town" (as we say in Philly), the goal is "networking," and I spend a good deal of time introducing (or reintroducing) myself to people who rarely admit that we have not met before. My task is to respond to the inevitable question: How are things at La Salle? Fortunately, there are always new and wonderful things happening here, so it is easy to say "fine," and to tick off a few pieces of good news. Increasingly, though, I have to tell them what most already know from their own businesses: it's a struggle. And that brings me to the other part of my job.

As CEO, I am responsible to the Board of Trustees for the operation of the University, and beyond that for the academic, fiscal and societal growth of the institution. And I am equally responsible to the people of La Salle: more than 1,000 employees, about 5,700 students, as well as more than 30,000 alumni/ae.

It would be nice at this point to simply say these are great times to be a CEO in higher education, but that is simply not the case. Particularly in private higher education, these are exceptionally difficult times because of demographic changes, stresses in regional and national economies, changes in governmental policies and priorities, and a number of other factors that contributed to serious financial concerns across academia. It is scant consolation to hear of comparable institutions laying off faculty and staff, cutting salaries, and dismantling programs. My job, in cooperation with the Board and La Salle administration, faculty, and staff, is to make sure La Salle University continues to thrive.

It is perhaps ironic that at a time when La Salle has achieved a breathtakingly beautiful campus, a superb and committed faculty, an increasingly qualified student body, and a reputation for excellence, that we are also experiencing serious threats to that success. It is beyond the scope of this essay to describe in detail the serious challenges we face and the equally serious actions we are taking to get us through these times. We are blessed with a highly committed and involved Board of Trustees, and the La Salle Community as a whole is pulling together to get the job done. We are deeply involved in planning for the future, knowing that we still have some very rough years ahead. However, one thing we know for sure: we will not get through this without the support and generosity of our alumni/ae and friends.

As I begin my third year, I have a fantasy. In this fantasy all of our thousands upon thousand of graduates and friends help us recruit students by spreading the word about the quality of a La Salle education. In this fantasy these same folks reach deeper into their pockets to help preserve and enhance the University.

They say that at times fantasies do come true.

Brother Burke was named La Salle's 27th president in 1992. Previously he served as the university's provost and vice president of the corporation and, before that, dean of the College of Basic Studies and special assistant to the president of the University of Hartford.

THE WALK-IN TIME TUNNEL

By Sonya Senkowsky, '90

Brother Thomas Warner (right) and Brother Joseph Grabenstein display some of the artifacts stored in La Salle's Archives.

La Salle's Archives have served as a valuable resource for all types of researchers from historians and academicians to private detectives

To warn away travelers, map makers once marked unexplored regions with a warning: "Beyond here, there be dragons."

But the sign in the La Salle University Archives is there because Brother Thomas Warner, F.S.C., '41, wants to invite, not discourage. "I hate those 'Keep Out', 'No Admission' signs," says the longtime librarian/archivist.

Here, everyone is an explorer.

From relics to records, the five-year-old climate-controlled Archives area neatly and safely stores 194 boxes and 55 shelves full of treasures.

In them is the "virtually original" charter of the college as well as a leaf collection kept by Dr. Roland Holroyd; Mother Theresa's autograph as well as the tape-recorded voice of Sen. Hubert Humphrey; cookie jars shaped like Christian Brothers and ceremonial shovels from campus groundbreakings.

Over the past 50 years, Brother Warner has transformed these items from secret attic curiosities into accessible campus resources. And with his retirement last January 1, after 10 official years as archivist, he leaves a legacy —of legacies.

"Our Archives is a walk-in time tunnel," says interim archivist Brother Joseph Grabenstein, '73. It is also a classroom. "I still teach, not with chalk and a blackboard, but with old maps and old yearbooks," he adds.

If it was Brother Warner's role to shepherd the collection through its many moves — from the College Hall Library, to the David Leo Lawrence Library attic, to the Brothers' residence basement, to Physical Plant headquarters at Wister and Belfield, to its present location — it is Brother Grabenstein's role to teach, and to keep the Archives from being "the best-kept secret on campus."

A student or visitor can easily pass by the Archives without knowing it is there.

Though Brother Warner had originally hoped for an office in the heavily visited Connelly Library, final plans for the building had no room for an Archives. But there was room in the basement of College Hall, the old home of the university mailroom.

As a result, says Brother Grabenstein, "We're off that beaten track. And we want to be back on the map." He'd like to see tour and student groups regularly visit the holdings and has a wish list of projects for students, from translating a French comic book into English, to cataloguing Collegians.

There are many surprises to be found. "I take perverse delight at meetings when somebody orates about the liberal arts tradition of this institution," says Brother Warner, brandishing course descriptions from the college's first days. Forty-three engineering classes dominate the book. "Liberal arts?" he huffs. "Heh, heh, heh."

"I've never seen anybody who spends so much time getting others interested in history," says Kathryn Duffy, an English and film major who graduated in May.

Like many others on campus, the 21-year-old Collegian columnist didn't know about the Archives until she was told about it. While taking an honors course on the art and culture of the 1930s, Ms. Duffy met Father Thomas Donaghy, whose written notes and tape-recorded interviews for his La Salle history, Conceived in Crisis, are preserved in the Archives.

Then she met Brothers Warner and Grabenstein. Now, Ms. Duffy's own writings join Donaghy's in the Archives collection.

Since her first visit, the young history buff has returned frequently to the Archives. She has traced rumors of campus haunting, researched the groundbreakings of buildings, and tracked stories of old campus traditions. She wrote about her finds weekly in a campus newspaper column, "Duffy Tells All."

Ms. Duffy recently completed a documentary video interviewing senior community members about the history of La Salle. One likely candidate might be 90 year-old Brother Erminus Joseph, who often helps identify archival photographs.

Another natural interview would be Brother Warner, who "remembers firsthand these goofy little aspects that are a part of the university's history," says Ms. Duffy.

"When you find the story in history, you're going to remember it," says Brother Grabenstein, who encourages both the casual sightseer and the focused scholar to explore the Archives holdings. "My job as archivist is to facilitate those people who are curious," he says.

All kinds of curious people visit the Archives looking for stories. Christian Brothers from throughout the Baltimore Province come to research the Brothers' collection, held in a separate room from the La Salle artifacts. Its photographs and detailed records augment and enhance the nearby La Salle collection.

The Keeper of History in a Pyramid of Boxes

On his first day of retirement as archivist, Brother Thomas Warner found himself clinging to a two-story ladder outside College Hall in subfreezing weather.

The New Year's Day fire which drove him there, and which left smoke and ash through much of the Brothers residence, left behind no injuries. But it did inadvertently fulfill a wish.

"I had been hoping for something exciting to happen," he says. "I should've left well enough alone."

It would not have been fitting for this chapter of Brother Warner's life to end without fanfare. Officially, he was named archivist at La Salle in 1984 when he retired after a distinguished 38-year career as the university's director of library services.

Known affectionately as "Library Joe," Brother Warner has been a member of the Christian Brothers for 58 years. In addition to serving as national parliamentarian of the Catholic Library Association, he has made valuable use of his spare time by becoming a licensed magician, a hobbyist in clocks, a pinochle wizard, and a self-taught computer programmer.

Unofficially, Brother Thomas has cared for La Salle's history since the mid-1940s. The process became somewhat more organized 20 years later when the collection was moved to "The Penthouse," his term for the David Leo Lawrence Library attic.

"There was no curator, nobody in charge of it," says Brother Warner. "We just put it there."

Despite a lack of resources, the drive to acquire kept La Salle's history safe. "Anything that looked old, we said, 'That's archives,'" recalls Brother Warner. But record-keeping suffered. "Catalogued? There was just this pyramid of boxes," he explains.

But the collection continued to grow. People like the late Brother Edward John, La Salle's longtime bursar, used to add to it extensively.

By September 1989, the mailroom in the basement of College Hall had been renovated into a state-of-the-art collections area. Now, the records that once fought mold and rot in basements and attics are kept at a constant 68° F, and at a relative humidity of 40. "The man behind it all is Brother Thomas," emphasizes Brother Joseph Grabenstein, who was recently appointed interim archivist.

Though the Archives represents an achievement of which Brother Warner can be proud, he says he will not have a problem staying away. "I would much prefer to not be haunting the place," he says.

Brother Warner not only wishes to avoid the appearance that he is looking over his protege's shoulder; the twice-retired Brother hopes that this time the appellation will stick.

"After the third or fourth time I'll get good at it," he says.

Ms. Senkowsky, who recently completed an internship as a reporter for The Washington Times, is a correspondent for the South Jersey Bureau of The Philadelphia Inquirer.

Any alumnus or student could find something of interest in either of the archival collections, says Brother Grabenstein. He suggests beginning with an old yearbook, an old Collegian, or an old LA SALLE magazine to look up a relative's date of graduation.

Or one could use the typewritten "tour," arranged by interest area, that was prepared by Brother Grabenstein for the casual visitor. In it, he identifies "the unusual" holdings, including confederate currency given to a past La Salle president and two preserved pieces of an old campus oak tree. To find any of the items on the list, just look up the box number, and pull them out.

One time, Brother Grabenstein recounts, a private detective came to find photographs of a missing woman. Was she found? He doesn't know. What was important to him was that he could help. "When you think of missing persons, you don't think of an archives. But somebody did," he says.

In Brother Grabenstein's hands, even traditional archival records take on new meaning. Some of the Archives' oldest holdings are its elaborately handwritten student registers from the late 19th and early 20th centuries and academic records from 1886 to 1914.

As he likes to demonstrate, even the most basic record brings up questions for the historian.

According to the monstrous record-book from the 1800s, Brother Grabenstein points out, seniors then weren't called seniors; they were the "First Class." They weren't judged on reading, writing and other subjects familiar to us today; they were judged on deportment and mensuration (conduct and measuring). And the book's grade reports for every student were updated, not quarterly or monthly — but weekly.

Brother Grabenstein holds the book with gloved hands, and he smiles. "I wonder... Were they doing that to keep the kids on their toes? Or the Brothers?"

Either way, the century-old exercise of discovering, learning and teaching is still keeping at least one Brother busy — and happy.

"A Disaster in the Truest Sense of the Word"

The parking lot of Northridge Hospital Medical Center served as the emergency room for almost a week after the 6.8 magnitude earthquake hit the San Fernando Valley last Jan. 17.

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

As chief of emergency medicine at Northridge Hospital Medical Center in California's San Fernando Valley, Paul Karis, M.D., '75, thought he had seen it all. He had been through his share of minor earthquakes where things would shake and rattle a bit, but he wasn't really worried about living in such a vulnerable area. Even hearing stories about the last "Big One" in 1971 didn't concern him.

But at 4:30 in the morning of January 17, as Dr. Karis was jolted from a sound sleep at his home in Pasadena, he immediately realized that this quake was different. "The shaking was very violent and it lasted a long time," the physician recalled recently. "Things were falling down all over the house. Books were flying off the shelves, all the drawers and cabinets were flinging open, and glass was shattering. I was almost thrown out of bed. You just knew that this was a biggie."

With most of the TV stations knocked off the air and little information immediately available from radio, total confusion reigned for almost an hour. "All that you heard was that LA had experienced a major earthquake," said Karis. "But nobody could communicate with any of the resources that normally tell you where it is." Soon reports started filtering in, pinpointing the center of the quake in the Northridge area of the San Fernando Valley about 20 miles away.

Karis packed a few belongings in an overnight bag and started the half-hour drive to his hospital where he supervises a medical staff of 17 physicians. The trip took four times that long. Freeways had collapsed. All the street lights and traffic signals were out. Many streets were blocked or damaged by debris but you couldn't tell in the darkness until you literally drove into the pile of bricks or rubble. There were numerous automobile accidents. Water mains and gas lines were bursting all over.

When Karis arrived in Northridge, the sun was just coming up. He couldn't believe what he saw. The five story hospital was severely damaged. The entire wall on one side was no longer there. "It was the most incredible thing I had ever seen," he recalled, "truly an awesome sight."

Karis picked his way through the rubble and rushed into the Emergency Room. "The first thing I saw was that the Trauma Unit had been converted into a Neonatal Intensive Care Unit," he said. About 25 babies had been carefully carried five stories down and placed in shelves, drawers and cabinets to keep them warm.

Dr. Paul Karis,'75, and his Emergency Medical Team Worked Around the Clock at the Epicenter of the Great Earthquake of '94

"People who were here during the night tell me that they were all knocked over when the quake hit," explained Karis who has worked at this hospital since 1984. " It lasted for about 30 seconds. All the electricity went out. The sprinkler system went off and everything fell onto the floors—even monitors that were bolted to the walls."

The upper floors of the hospital took the worst hit with the Neonatal Intensive Care Unit suffering the most damage. All the elevators were knocked out so 340 patients had to be evacuated down the stairwells. Doors had to be forced—in some cases broken— open because the ground had actually lifted five and six feet in some spots. The hospital's CAT scan, X-Ray, and magnetic-resonance-imaging equipment was destroyed.

The entire area surrounding the hospital was in total darkness. The facility, itself, which serves as the Trauma Center for the San Fernando Valley, stood out eerily as a bright beacon because of emergency generators. About 1,000 people wandered around, shaken and stunned in the parking lot. Some of them were wrapped in sheets. Others had only their underwear on. One man was completely naked but no one seemed to notice. Several hundred patients were there, too.

"People just left their homes and came here because they were scared and this was the only place that had light," said Karis. "They came here in droves with all kinds of injuries. We had to move the Emergency Room out to the parking lot because we had no operating room, no lab facilities, no water, no communication system, no functioning toilets, no monitors, no oxygen, no nothing. It was like a bombed out structure. It was a disaster in the truest sense of the word. I mean it was like Sarajevo."

Karis and his staff, working 16 hours at a clip, treated more than 500 patients—and delivered about 20 babies— in the parking lot that first day but were unable to offer much more than first aid because of a lack of facilities and equipment. The ground was constantly shaking as major aftershocks jolted the area every 30 minutes. There were numerous broken bones, head injuries, lacerations, and major heart attacks. A steady stream of helicopters—"It looked like MASH out there"—soon began evacuating patients and seriously injured casualties to about 15 other hospitals.

"It really was indescribable," recalled Karis, who was interviewed during the week on CNN, the Today show on NBC, and as the lead story on ABC News With Peter Jennings, among others. "We just took it minute by minute and hour by hour to try to do the best that we could for the people who were here. But it was scary. People watching TV could see what was happening but we had no idea what was going on or how many casualties there were. Occasionally we got some news from paramedics who would say, 'well it's pretty bad out there. The Meadows (apartment complex where 16 people died) collapsed. The Mall is gone, Bullocks (Department Store) has been trashed.'"

Paul Karis, M.D.

Late in the day water and portable toilets began arriving. Communication facilities were restored. Doctors and nurses were flown in from surrounding states to assist. By the second day some tents were erected and the parking lot was partitioned for different types of injuries. Karis didn't get a chance to go home for a few hours until after the third day. For the rest of the week, the hospital operated out of the parking lot.

By noon time on Friday, hospital officials thought the worst was over and were preparing to bring everything inside. Karis had spent most of the day cleaning up, testing equipment, and moving some furniture back into place. Then the biggest aftershock of the week hit, toppling walls, cracking ceilings, and inflicting even more serious damage. Pipes broke and water came pouring down, saturating areas that had just been spruced up.

"It was frustrating," recalled Karis. "By then people were really tired and stressed out. You really thought you've had enough. Just when you thought you were making some progress. Everybody was just fed up and wanted this thing to go away. That was a real downer. You really felt that nature was against you."

The decision was made to keep everything outside until the following Monday. Ten days later, Northridge Hospital Medical Center resumed normal activities.

Karis, who attended Georgetown University Medical School, grew up in northeast Philadelphia. A biology major, he has fond memories of La Salle and such professors as Brother James Muldoon, Dr. Norbert Belzer, the late Brother Richard Hawley and Dr. Thomas Lowry. "Those were good years," he recalled. "I enjoyed my time at La Salle and would not hesitate to send my own children there."

La Salle Mourns Deaths of Former President

Brother Daniel Bernian, F.S.C., Ph.D., who served as the 24th President of La Salle University from 1958 to 1969, died on May 14 of kidney failure at the Christian Brothers nursing home at Lincroft, N.J., where he had lived for the past six years. He was 77.

Brother Bernian, a native of Baltimore and a member of the Brothers of the Christian Schools for 58 years, was also a professor of French and Spanish on La Salle University's faculty. He retired from teaching in 1987.

The face of La Salle's campus changed considerably during Brother Bernian's tenure as president when enrollment increased from 3,987 to 6,470 day and evening division students. The Roland Holroyd Science Center, a Student Union, and three residence halls were constructed and ground was broken for the Olney Hall classroom building and Hayman Hall, the university's athletic facilities building.

In addition, two laymen were appointed vice presidents of the university for the first time in 1959. Previously, only members of the Christian Brothers served as top level administrators at La Salle. Brother Bernian also founded the popular La Salle Music Theatre in 1962—which became a popular cultural attraction for 27 years, and established the school's first Faculty Senate in 1966.

"I think it's accurate to say that Dan ushered in the era of the modern day president at La Salle," said Brother Emery Mollenhauer, the university's former provost, in his eulogy at Brother Bernian's funeral. "He garnered an unusual share of honors for us; his public involvement brought much recognition to the college.

Brother Daniel Bernian (center) presided over the most festive celebration in La Salle's history, the year-long Centennial commemoration of the college's 100th anniversary in 1963. Here he is joined by Pennsylvania Governor David L. Lawrence and Philadelphia Archbishop John J. Krol at the opening dinner at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

"Dan was an uncomplicated, unsophisticated, understanding man whom people felt comfortable with," added Brother Emery. "His accomplishments were also due in no small measure to his essential common sense, his flexibility, and his genius for not interfering in the governance of what he had delegated. He had the ability to let people function.

"In his daily life, Dan bore witness to his great respect for the undramatic virtues of dedication and, especially, loyalty. Most of all, however, we should recall that Dan was a man whose life was animated by faith. He gave adult reality to the admonition which forms the entrance prayer for the feast of St. John Baptist de La Salle: 'Suffer the little children to come to me...for such is the kingdom of God.' An uncomplicated, unpretentious, humble man of enviable simplicity, Dan gave himself unreservedly and faithfully to the Lord, to the Brothers, and to the college."

"He was a scholar and he was someone who took the university through a very important period of growth," said Brother Andrew Bartley, La Salle's director of public affairs in an interview with The Philadelphia Inquirer. "He did it well and he won respect. A good man."

Brother Bernian earned his bachelor's degree in liberal arts from The Catholic University of America, in Washington, D.C., in 1938 and a master's degree in French and Spanish from the University of Pennsylvania in 1943. He received a doctorate in French from Laval University, Quebec, Canada, in 1952. He also did post graduate study in Rome, Italy, and at the University of Denver.

Brother Bernian taught at Philadelphia's West Catholic High School from 1938 to 1940 and again from 1941 until 1947 when he also was moderator of track and cross country. He also taught at College St. Patrice, Quebec, Canada (1940-41), at Philadelphia's La Salle College High School (1947-49), and at The Catholic University (1949-51).

and Chairman of Psychology Department

In 1951, Brother Bernian joined La Salle University's faculty as a French professor. Two years later, he became the school's first director of housing and dean of men. From 1954-58, he served as dean of students and also as vice president of the Board of Managers of the La Salle College Corporation.

Brother Bernian, who traveled extensively throughout Canada, Europe, and the Middle East, received numerous awards including honorary degrees from La Salle, Villanova, Temple, and St. Joseph's Universities.

He held a variety of civic and cultural posts including chairmanship of the (Philadelphia) Mayor's Commission on Higher Education. He was a long time member of the Board of Trustees at Philadelphia Community College and Immaculata College and the executive committee of the Pennsylvania Association of Colleges and Universities and the Foundation for Independent Colleges. He was former regional president of the National Catholic Educational Association and a member of the honorary Board of Directors of the Philadelphia Grand Opera Company.

He is survived by two sisters, Mrs. Margaret Bagwell and Mrs. Catherine Tyson, and two brothers, John and Patrick Kelly, all of Baltimore.

A Mass of Resurrection was sung on May 18 at the La Salle University Chapel. Burial was the following day at the Christian Brothers Cemetery, in Ammendale, Md.

In his memory, a Brother Daniel Bernian Memorial Scholarship Fund has been established. Memorial gifts may be made to this fund in care of the La Salle University Development Office, Philadelphia, PA 19141. ■

Brother John P. Dondero, F.S.C., Ph.D., former chairman of La Salle's Psychology Department and a nationally-recognized expert on the psychological assessment of religious vocations, died of congestive heart failure on June 18 at the Roncalli Center, the Christian Brothers community that he founded in Oak Lane. He was 72.

Brother Dondero, a native of Philadelphia and a member of the Christian Brothers for 54 years, taught undergraduate and graduate courses at La Salle from 1959 until his retirement in 1992. He served as chairman of the Psychology Department from 1965 to 1968 and again from 1972 to 1974.

He was president of the university's Faculty Senate in 1975-76 and was a recipient of a Christian Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching in 1973. He was also assistant director of La Salle's Counseling Center from 1960-1963.

A licensed psychologist and past president of the American Catholic Psychological Association, Brother Dondero was the author of numerous articles in professional journals and two books, The Reconciliation of Religious Life: Opportunity or Fiction (1979) and No Borrowed Light: Mental Health for Religious (1965).

Brother Dondero directed dozens of counseling workshops and psychological assessment programs for religious superiors, brothers, nuns, and priests, U.S. Army and Air Force chaplains, public health officials, and seminary students throughout the United States, Canada, Europe, and Asia.

Before joining La Salle's faculty, Brother Dondero taught at Philadelphia's La Salle College High

University's Legal Advisor Honored at Commencement

Walter L. Bartholomew, Jr., Esq. (center), receives honorary degree from Brother President Joseph F. Burke (left) and Brother Michael J. McGinniss.

Walter L. Bartholomew, Jr., Esq., who served as legal advisor to La Salle University's Board of Trustees for 21 years, received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at La Salle's 131st commencement on May 15 at Philadelphia's Civic Center Convention Hall.

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., conferred a total of 1,059 undergraduate and graduate degrees. Bachelor's degrees were conferred on 854 men and women including 141 part-time students from the School of Continuing Studies and 52 from the School of Nursing.

Another 205 graduates received master's degrees. They include 89 in business administration, 31 in education, 30 in nursing, 24 in bilingual/bicultural studies, 15 in psychology, nine in pastoral counseling, six in religion, and one in organization management.

Bartholomew was sponsored for his honorary degree by Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., the vice president of the La Salle University Corporation who has been named president of Christian Brothers University, in Memphis, Tenn., effective July 1.

Bartholomew, who retired in March as La Salle's legal advisor, "served with distinction, loyalty, and dedication," said McGinniss. "He was continually supportive of the La Sallian mission and goals of the university. His advice to the Board was thoughtful, thoroughly researched, and meticulously prepared.

"All aspects of his career and his person embody the "Brotherly Love" which we recognize as the true hallmarks of a Philadelphia lawyer."

A graduate of Bowdoin College and the University of Pennsylvania Law School, Bartholomew is a partner and chairman of the Real Estate Department of the Philadelphia law firm of Montgomery, McCracken, Walker & Rhoads.

Bartholomew has lectured extensively on real estate law throughout the Commonwealth for the Pennsylvania Bar Institute. He was co-founder of the Real Estate Committee of the Philadelphia Bar Association.

La Salle's annual Baccalaureate Mass was celebrated on May 14 at the Cathedral Basilica of SS. Peter and Paul, 18th st. and Benjamin Franklin Parkway.

Mother and Daughter Graduate From La Salle Together

Kathryn Duffy and her daughter Kathryn, of northeast Philadelphia, have much more in common these days than just their identical names. Both Kathryn and the younger Duffy (as she prefers to be called), graduated together from La Salle at the university's commencement on May 15 at the Philadelphia Civic Center.

They both started their college careers four years ago, with the hope of graduating together. Kathryn spent her first year at Manor Junior College, but later transferred to La Salle, where her daughter was already enrolled. Throughout the next three years both women led very hectic lives, but in different ways.

Duffy, a film and English major, spent much of her time involved in activities on and off campus. She wrote a weekly column for the Collegian, La Salle's student newspaper, served as coordinator of L.O.C.K., La Salle Organization Caring For Kids, played the trombone in the Band, volunteered her time at Shriner's Hospital, and even managed to win the McShain Award for academic achievement and be named to the Alpha Epsilon Honor Society.

Kathryn, a social work major, was busy working full time as a patient representative in the Fox Chase Cancer Center, taking three or four classes a semester, including summers, running her home and caring for her family. With the help of a supportive husband she was able to keep it all going and still manage a 3.78 grade point average. And she also was named to the Alpha Epsilon Honor Society.

"It can be done," Kathryn explains. "I think the thing is when you do it fast like this you see an end. When you drag it out, you think, "What's the use?". My goal was to graduate the same time as her (Duffy), and that's what pushed me, that made me do it."

And that's also what made her start this project in the first place. She had always wanted to be a social worker, but never thought she could do it. When her daughter started at La Salle, that inspired her to pursue her dream. And although Kathryn was scared and unsure, having Duffy around to show her the ropes, made a world of difference.

"I never thought I could do it. There's all these different reasons, like if I start what if I can't do it and have to stop?," she said. "Coming to the campus was so much easier having Duffy here. She told me, 'Oh it's not so bad, you can do it.'"

They took one course together when Kathryn first came to La Salle and Duffy showed her mother the important things, like where to park and how to get around in all the buildings. Then she was on her own. But not really.

Although they majored in different courses of study, they still saw each other on campus, in the cafeteria, in the bookstore or walking around. And they got to know one another's friends and teachers, and a better understanding of each other's experiences.

According to Duffy, "She knows all my friends. All my teachers too. I'll walk by and see her eating there with my friends or talking to my teachers. Having her here, she knows what I'm talking about. If I say that a teacher gave another assignment that's ridiculous, she knows what I'm talking about. If I say something was unfair, she won't think I'm just blowing it off."

"And I think that I respect the older students a lot more. When I see them in my own classes I feel like I know them better, and I think they add a lot to the class because they have more experiences to draw from."

Kathryn Duffy (foreground) and Duffy

But teachers and friends are not the only things this mother and daughter shared while in college together. In fact Kathryn was so enthusiastic about her classes at La Salle that she shared them with her husband and son as well.

"When she takes a course, we all seem to pretty much take it together," Duffy said smiling. "We know everything that goes into that class, we know every chapter she's learning, she'll read us her notes. When she took anatomy and physiology we had to learn about various parts of bodies, she even had me sit in on a couple of classes with her."

"I was really fascinated with anatomy and physiology," Kathryn responded. "I thought they should all know how every part of the body works. Plus, in telling them, I learned. We all benefitted."

And now that graduation is upon them, they are both looking towards graduate school. Kathryn wants her masters degree so she can practice as an oncology social worker. Duffy wants to eventually teach on the college level.

Graduate Professional Communication Program Begins in September

Dr. Richard Goedkoop (left) chats with Brother Gerard Molyneaux, chairman of the Communication Department, outside the new Communication classroom and studio facility at the university's South Campus.

La Salle University will offer a unique new graduate program in Professional Communication beginning in September, it was announced by the university's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.

The part-time, 36 credit, Master of Arts in Professional Communication program is designed primarily for professionals working in the business and communication fields who wish to become better skilled with communication issues and practices.

Unlike other graduate offerings that are more theoretical or focus on topics such as journalism, radio and television, La Salle's program will emphasize communicating, writing and speaking on the corporate level, according to Dr. Richard Goedkoop, the director of the program. It will also offer comprehensive training in theory and research to strengthen the student's quantitative skills.

"La Salle's program will be quite different than any other graduate program offered in the Middle Atlantic area," said Dr. Goedkoop. "Advanced courses, for example, will represent the four areas in which the professional communicator is most likely to need expertise—interpersonal, mass, and organizational communication, and public relations. "It is designed from a practical standpoint to enhance the skills of people heavily involved with writing, audiovisual services, or any of the information technologies used in the corporate world in such a way that it will make these professionals more competitive in the marketplace."

Students in La Salle's Master of Arts in Professional Communication program will also have the opportunity to complete a practicum where they can develop a project at their workplace or at another professional setting. Students will develop a major thesis or major project related to their professional interests.

All courses will be offered at La Salle's new state-of-the-art Communication building, presently under construction on the university's South Campus.

For further information, please call or write to Dr. Richard Goedkoop, Graduate Director, Communication Department, La Salle University Box #172, 1900 W. Olney ave., Philadelphia, PA 19141. Phone: (215) 951-1155.

Bike Patrol Strengthens Campus Security

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke (right), and Robert J. La Ratta, the university's director of safety and security, pose with some of the university's bike patrol officers after taking a ride on one of the university's new TREK 7000 All Terrain Mountain Bikes to introduce La Salle's latest security innovation.

The bike patrol officers pictured: (from left): Darrell Jefferson, Michael Robison, Robert Todd, and Sean Craig. They and the other bike patrol officers were selected after completing a rigorous training program that included a physical fitness test, a written examination, and personal interviews.

La Salle purchased three of the bikes, made especially for law enforcement, to help its 44 person security staff patrol the 85 acre campus. The U.S. made bikes were placed into service during the week of April 11.

La Ratta said that the bikes will not only enhance La Salle's security efficiency but will also act as a strong crime deterrent in the community.

"With the bikes, we will be able to patrol seven to eight times more territory than we could cover on foot," La Ratta explained. "We will also strengthen our relationship with our neighbors. Not only will we be more visible but we will be able to report any criminal activity in the surrounding community as we patrol the perimeter of the campus."

New Chaircouple Named for Parents' Association

Bill and Marie Jones, of Southampton, Pa., have been named chaircouple for La Salle's Parents' Association for 1994-95. They succeed Lee and Mary Kay Mullen, who served as chaircouple since 1992.

Owners and operators of the Carriage Stop in Richboro, Pa., the Jones have three daughters, a son, and four grandchildren. Their son, Bill, Jr., '96, is an accounting major at the university.

"Students will feel that someone is looking out for their interests and trying to make things better," said Bill, Sr., in discussing their goals as chaircouple. "We will get things accomplished. We will have more people involved, more people excited, and more dollars raised to benefit the students."

Referring to the role of the Parents' Association at La Salle, Bill added, "It used to be that when I was involved with my son's school, he would be a little embarrassed that I was there. Now my son wonders why if I'm not. I think the Parents' Association can be there for all our children."

Diplomat in Residence Program Inaugurated with Appearance by Cyprus Ambassador

Brother President Joseph Burke, F.S.C, Ph.D., (left) welcomed His Excellency Andrew J. Jacovides, Ambassador of the Republic of Cyprus to the U.S., to La Salle in April as the first guest of the university's new Diplomat in Residence Program. The Ambassador gave a lecture on Diplomacy and Conflict Resolution in Cyprus, the Middle East and the Balkans.

In addition to Jacovides, the Honorable Charalambos Kapsos, Consul General of the Republic of Cyprus to the U.S., was also a guest of the new Diplomat in Residence Program. He gave a lecture on Making Peace Where Hatreds Never Die - Problems and Prospects of Middle East Peace Making, and participated in a panel discussion as well.

La Salle's new Diplomat-In-Residence Program, which aims to strengthen international studies at the university, will sponsor two or three day visits by foreign and American diplomats and officers of international organizations that will include lectures, classroom visits, meetings with select groups on and off campus and conferences and symposia with journalists and academics.

Dr. Cornelia Tsakiridou, assistant professor of philosophy at the university, coordinated the inaugural program.

Men Repeat as MCC Swimming Champions; Doug LeVien Emerges as a Heavy Hitter both on and off the Baseball Field

By BOB VETRONE
Assistant Sports Information Director

So maybe it wasn't just the home-pool advantage after all.

When the La Salle University men's swimming team upset Notre Dame for the Midwestern Collegiate Conference championship last year, part of the success was attributed to the fact that the meet was in the Explorers' Joe Kirk Natatorium.

To disprove that theory, then, coach John Lyons and his mermen went to the home of the Fighting Irish and won in a walk — or in a swim. The numbers: La Salle 1,062, Notre Dame 674.

And the team that had the honor of bringing La Salle its first MCC title — that men's swimming championship in February, 1993 — now wears the proud mantle of double winner.

And, as in 1993, the Explorers swam off with an abundance of individual honors:

- Lyons was the MCC and National Catholics Coach of the Year;
- Sophomore Paul DeConti earned Outstanding Male Swimmer Award in both the MCC's and the National Catholics;
- Senior Deirdre Lynch was voted the MCC's Outstanding Female Swimmer
- Senior Cheryl Coppola concluded a superb La Salle career when she was voted the National Catholics Outstanding Female Diver and set MCC records in the one and three-meter diving events;
- Freshman Les Riveria was Co-Newcomer of the Year in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

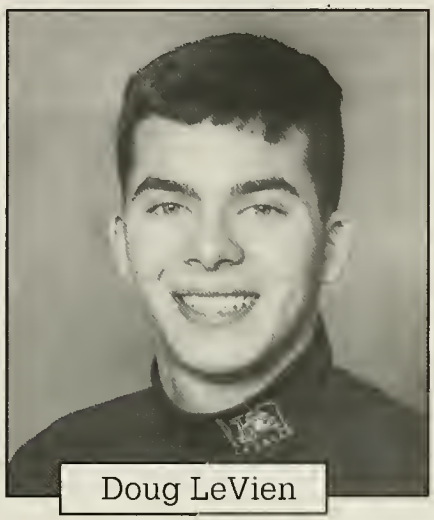
In the women's team scoring, the Explorers were edged by the Fighting Irish, 841-830.

While other Explorer squads couldn't match the success of the swimmers, there were individual and team accomplishments spread throughout the 22-sport athletic program.



Doug LeVien

No individual was more visible than Doug LeVien, senior outfielder on Gene McDonnell's baseball team (10-36). A product of Xavier High (Brooklyn, NY), LeVien's timing was impeccable. Just when he was receiving the James A. Finnegan Award on March 29, he also was in the midst of a La Salle record-setting consecutive-game hitting streak.

By time he was stopped by the Lafayette Leopards on April 22, he had hit in 22 straight games, breaking the 1988 mark of 18 set by Barry Petrachenko.

The Finnegan Award is presented at the Student Affairs Awards Reception in the Union Ballroom on campus, and, the way it reads in the program for the ceremony, "is given to the member of La Salle's graduating class who, by virtue of accomplishments and service, is judged by the faculty to show promise of applying Judeo-Christian ideals of social justice in a political or governmental career."

"It was a great honor," LeVien said, "to be recognized by La Salle. It was a goal I wanted to achieve and I am happy I did.

"Reiterating the words of president Theodore Roosevelt, `Far and away, the best prize that life offers is the chance to work hard at work worth doing'."

LeVien led La Salle in hitting (.324) and runs batted in (30) and added to his laurels by being voted to the All-Midwestern Collegiate Conference second team. Fellow outfielder, freshman Brian Schaller, made the MCC All-Newcomer team, hitting .297 and leading the team in runs, hits, triples and homers (6, including two grand slams).

On graduation weekend, LeVien received his lieutenant's commission as a member of La Salle's ROTC unit and was awaiting orders for foreign service.

Track and cross-country, under the tutelage of Charles Torpey and his energetic staff, remained on the upswing. Most notable was a national 10th-place standing in the men's 4x1,500 at 15:31.31. When you notice that some of the teams in front of the Explorers are such national powers as Arkansas, Providence, Penn State and Georgetown, it puts La Salle in pretty good company. That foursome included freshman Brian Gallagher, junior Joe Cranston, senior Robert Forberger and freshman Troy Harry.

Assistants Bob Duffy, Irv "Moon" Mondschein, and Leslee Martin helped Torpey get the program headed into even more impressive straits. Mondschein, a former Olympian from New York University, put added strength into the field events, as evidenced by victories by Steve Nyce in the MCC's shot put and Harry Tomaszewski in the 35-pound weight toss.

In the MCC meet, La Salle's 4x440 women's medley relay team of Lisa Hartley, Bridget Carney, Jen Quigley and Laura Rigolizzo posted a victorious 4:07.55.

In cross-country, Jason DiJoseph was La Salle's best in the MCC championships, with a ninth-place finish that earned him All-MCC honors.

Softball, under coach Ray Perri, matched its 25-25 record of 1993, and the question put to the Philadelphia Softball Hall of Famer was:

"Is this progress, regression or frustration?"

"I think it should be called progress," Perri said, "when you realize the kind of years some of the newcomers had and consider the fact that we were short-handed because of injuries.

"Three potential starters were medically-redshirted. Also, our pitching staff was made up of a junior, a sophomore and two freshmen."

The Explorers' record in MCC competition was 2-8 but four of the losses were by one run and the Explorers were in virtually every game against opponents from such highly-visible conferences as the MCC, the Big East and Atlantic 10.

With starters at six positions returning, four players coming off the medically-redshirted list, and another three prospects joining the team, Perri sees continuous improvement.

Individually, sophomore third baseman Jen Bostak made first-team All-MCC, senior first baseman Leah Gontarz was voted to the second team, and the freshman keystone combination of second baseman Jen Rueter and shortstop Kristen Biddle earned All-MCC Newcomer positions.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

In basketball, the women were up and the men were down. With a team including only two seniors and no juniors, coach John Miller guided the Explorers to a 19-9 overall record, 8-6 in the MCC, and a victory over host Butler in the conference tournament. The joy of that accomplishment lasted only a day, as La Salle went down before Notre Dame in the semifinals.

Coach Miller lost two stalwarts through graduation — four-year performers Mary Heller (All-MCC and All-Big 5 first teams) and Lisa Auman.

"There's no doubt we're going to miss them," Miller said. "But, on the positive side, during the season, we were able to use a lot of players and consequently, the ones

Another Outstanding Classroom Report

As usual, La Salle University student athletes fared well in the classroom while pursuing the competition of intercollegiate athletics.

Joseph Gillespie, director of athletic support services for student-athletes, released the following figures at the end of the 1994 spring semester:

Out of 409 student-athletes, 51 (or 13.5%) achieved cumulative averages between 3.0 and 3.39 (out of a possible 4.0). A total of 38 men and women (9.3%) had cumulative GPAs of 3.4 or higher.

For the spring semester only, 14% were in the 3.0 to 3.9 category, and 14.5% made the Dean's List (3.4 or higher).

"This is just another indication how our student-athletes continue to distinguish themselves in the classroom," said Dr. Raymond Heath, vice president for student affairs.

Dr. Heath also pointed out that, according to the latest NCAA figures, La Salle was in fifth place nationally among Division I schools with a 94% graduation rate of student athletes who entered in the 1987-88 academic year.

La Salle's men played 12 games against teams that made the 1993-94 NCAA or National Invitational Basketball Tournaments.

who are returning, have played a lot of minutes.

"For instance, Chrissie Donahue, a freshman, led the team in minutes played, about 28 a game. How often do you see a freshman doing that?"

Miller will have a solid core returning, plus he has brought in three outstanding prospects, so, as good as the past has been, the future appears even better.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

On the men's side, coach Speedy Morris found out what it's like to endure a losing season. The Explorers' 11-16 record (2-7 in games decided by seven points or fewer) marked the first time in Morris' 26-year career at high school and college levels that a team of his did not finish at .500 or above, and the first time since 1975-76 that an Explorers' men's basketball team did not at least break even.

His reaction?

"I didn't like it one bit, and I hope I never have to go through it again."

And even though the 1994-95 schedule appears as rugged as the one just gone by, (La Salle played 12 games against NCAA and post-season National Invitation Tournament teams), the return of five starters, plus an influx of recruits who should help, provides much hope.

Guards Kareem Townes (22.9) and Paul Burke (13.1) should at least maintain their scoring pace, while Romaine Haywood (10.3 points, 6.5 rebounds per game), who started 23 games as a sophomore, his first varsity season after sitting out one year under Proposition 48, may become a more powerful force.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Women's soccer (7-10-2) suffered its biggest loss off the field. Betty Ann Kempf, the coach who had started the program eight years previous and guided it through its infancy and then its early maturing process, was lured to Seton Hall University, of the Big East Conference.

The next move was to get a coach schooled in the philosophy and direction of La Salle's program. Enter Craig Dorman, who had been Kempf's assistant for five years.

"We are pleased that we are able to retain a person with the wealth of experience that Craig brings to the job," director of athletics Bob Mullen said. "The continuity that he brings is a welcomed bonus."

The fact that Dorman has considerable experience in youth soccer coaching throughout the area bodes well in the Explorers' constant search for local talent.

The naming of Dorman, incidentally, met with the expressed approval of the team. Everyone returns for 1994 except captain Debbie Marks.

On the field, the Explorers showed that, in most cases, it was able to hold its own in the MCC with a 3-2-1 record, good for a third-place finish, and tying nationally-ranked Rutgers in overtime. The Evansville Aces fell before La Salle in the quarter-finals of the MCC tournament, but second-seeded Xavier ousted the Explorers in the semifinals.

The offense picked up when Bridget Carney reported from the track team and her explosive speed opened up the game for the Explorers. Although missing some early action and seeing limited time in others, Carney tied for the scoring lead with fellow-sophomore Gabriella Parrino, with four goals. Goaltender Chris Raub posted a save percentage near 80%.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Men's soccer (1-16-2) struggled through a season brightened only by the performance of Kevin Gerry, who missed the first five games but came on to lead the team in scoring with five goals. Gerry, assist leader Dave Steinbach and goalie Tom Gallagher return as a nucleus for next season as coach Pat Farrell attempts to upgrade the program to a much-higher level.

Even though wrestling (2-8) is an indoor sport, the rugged winter weather played havoc with the schedule for coach Ed Lawless' team. Many of the tournaments in which

1993-94 SPORTS ROUNDUP

La Salle was entered never came off because of the icy road conditions. Sometimes the team wasn't even able to venture off the Hayman Hall parking lot. Lawless cited one example of what the weather did to the program:

"When the Christmas break was over, most of the wrestlers came back six or seven pounds overweight from celebrating the holidays. They got back in shape for the first meet after the break, only to have that meet and several others called off."

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Kathy DeAngelis' field hockey team (3-15-1) found out what "close" means — dropping 11 games by one goal, playing six overtime games.

Amy Antonelli, who doubles as a pitcher on the softball team, led in scoring with eight goals. The roster showed only three seniors on a 17-player list, so coach DeAngelis hopes some of those close losses may turn into victories.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Joe Boyle, a former Explorer golfer, took over as coach just before the season, when his team was headed into a series of invitational matches, from which Chris Sivak emerged as the leader.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Volleyball (8-24), under John Kunzier, increased its victory output from six to eight, as inexperience showed at almost every turn. Only one senior was on the roster and with every player having experienced a disappointing season, the determination to vault the program to a higher plane will be noticeable.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

Under coach Sean Drea, crew's re-organization, on and off the river, was becoming more evident. The ninth annual La Salle University Invitational Regatta on the Cooper River in South Jersey, drew a total of 22 colleges. As a hopeful sign of things to come, the weather was crew-perfect, something that wasn't always evident in previous years.

Drea and faculty consultant Dr. Jim Kelly already have plans to expand the social aspect of the day, usually held in early April, to include students and alumni, both in a spectator and picnic environment.

■ ■ ■ ■ ■ ■

When George Mecherly took over as men's tennis coach four years ago, his aim was to get the Explorers to a point where they could hold their own with local teams like St. Joseph's, schools whose athletic philosophies are similar to La Salle's.

How has he done?

"We have continued improving," Mecherly said, "and this year, we defeated St. Joseph's twice and had a dual meet record of 9-9."

No. 1 player Marc Mejia and # 2 Tony Russo, along with seniors Matt Howley and Dennis Christofor, contributed to the continuing improvement. Conference-wise, La Salle, while finishing last again, came within one point of tying for fifth place. It may not sound like much, but competing against teams that place greater emphasis on tennis than La Salle, it certainly is worth noting.

The women, under first-year coach Sue Burke, posted a 3-9 record, with Monica Rave making the best showing in the MCC tournament, finishing fifth in the # 1 singles bracket.

(Colleen Corace, La Salle University Assistant Sports Information Director, contributed to this article.)

Typical of many of the 22 teams comprising La Salle's athletic program, the women's crew, shown here on the Schuylkill River, looks forward to better days ahead.

Tasting "The Real World" Through MTV

Glen Naessens (top row, center) poses with other members of The Real World cast.

By Darren Boyle

Living in a strange house thousands of miles from home, where everything you do and say is watched, videotaped, studied, and aired on cable television would be unsettling to most people.

But living in a lavishly decorated, three story, $2 million dollar beach house in Venice, California for about five months, complete with hot tub, pool table, roof garden, with a trip to Cozumel, Mexico thrown in, may help to settle you down a bit. Glen Naessens, '92, certainly did, and despite some drawbacks, it was "probably one of the most interesting experiences that most kids my age can go through in America."

Naessens was one of seven young strangers who were selected from some 12,000 applicants as a roommate for MTV's second season of The Real World series. A reality based soap opera, the show selects ordinary young people from all across the country, from all walks of life, and allows them to live rent free in a house and go about their lives with one major condition - everything is videotaped, edited and shown on 8,349 cable TV stations nationally in weekly, half hour segments. The free-spirited participants were placed in a Southern California beach house. All elements of their everyday life were recorded, including domestic tensions, fighting, partying, working, discussing issues, boy/girlfriend troubles. Naessens compares being constantly watched to George Orwell's 1984.

"It was a whole Orwellian experience. There were surveillance cameras in every room except the bedrooms. But in every room there were microphones, and you couldn't see them because they were in the wall. I accepted the fact that they were going to show everything I do on TV, so you just learn to live with it."

Naessens, 23, was chosen in March, 1993, after a few episodes of the second season had already aired, to replace one of the original roommates who had been kicked out of the house by the others. Glen had missed the first cut after a prolonged, three month selection process. But two months later he won the replacement spot, after three new finalists were interviewed by the roommates in an episode that was shown on TV as part of the series.

Many segments concentrated on one or two members of the cast, which included four males and three females, although most dealt with the entire ensemble. One show concerned a roommates's pregnancy and abortion; another followed a cast member home to Ireland to visit his ailing father.

"I tried to stay true to myself and as honest as I could be in front of the cameras. It's one thing if I was to be in a movie, acting out a character, but with The Real World it's one of the only shows on TV or in the industry where you're acting yourself, other than the news, so I thought it was crucial to be the way I'd be anytime - my good moods, my bad moods," Naessens said.

The executive producers warned that everything the participants did could appear different from what actually occurred after editing. But life without privacy also had benefits: MTV paid royalties, the phone bill, provided money for food and expenses, and sent the cast on a few trips.

"We had tons of restrictions as far as the house went because this was a studio, like a set. The furniture was priceless. But they did give us a lot of freedom, like bringing in guests," Naessens said.

"I'm a very shy guy, to most people, and being an MTV roommate was something I couldn't see myself doing. I went to school for communications, but I'm more comfortable behind the camera. But I figured it would be good for me - it's LA, I want to do films someday or direct, and I also figured it would help my band get attention. It seemed like a good move, and I was willing to sacrifice everything for it," Naessens explained.

Naessens, a native of Roslyn, Pa., is lead singer for the grunge/hard rock band "Perch." During his days at La Salle Naessens played in a popular band called "Mad Anthony Wayne and the Magnetic Jesus" while also working at a local record store. He formed "Perch" right after he graduated with a bachelor's degree in communication.

As soon as filming of the series ended in June, 1993, Naessens decided to stay in California, living next door to the former MTV house. He spends time working as an office production assistant on various movie sets and continues to practice and sing with his band. In addition to picking up a small, non-speaking scene in a soon-to-be-released D-TV movie (which goes directly to video without theatrical release), Glen's band was also in a few quick scenes in the recently-released film, Reality Bites, starring Winona Ryder, produced by Danny DeVito, and directed by Ben Stiller.

Was he prepared for The Real World experience?

"I'm from a family of nine brothers and sisters, and I thought I could deal with it (living with the roommates), but then with the cameras, you add another twist to it, and then they are adding people who aren't related to you, so what's the point of getting along? They pick people because they know there is going to be tension." Although Naessens did not get along with everyone, he still keeps in contact with some of his former "roomies."

The series has been so successful that MTV is currently airing an all-new third season. The episodes featuring Naessens are being rerun on MTV in Europe.

"Everybody thinks you're an instant celebrity just because you did this thing, but you still have to make something out of it," Naessens explained.

"How many people get this opportunity? Sure I could have sat in my room for another year and then eventually taken some job at some publicity firm, but this has just opened so many doors.

"The whole experience was fascinating. I'm sure the more I look back on it and the more I see about it, it is going to be extremely beneficial."

Mr. Boyle is a staff assistant in the university's News Bureau.

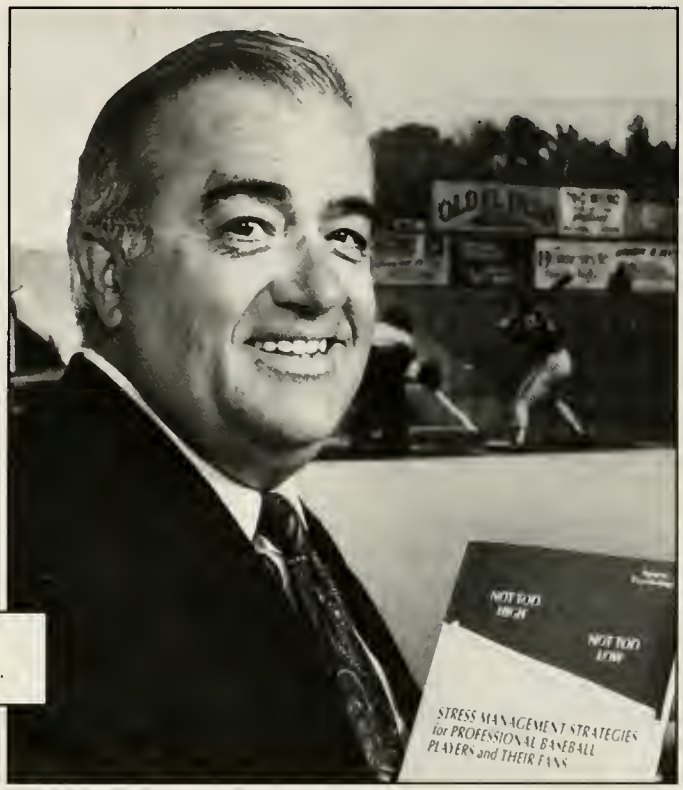
Painting Stress Management Pictures – Major League Style



Dr. James T. Richard displays his book at his office in Newtown, Pa.

When Dr. James T. Richard, '60, paints those vivid pictures in his stress management lectures, the Bucks County psychologist speaks from experience.

"People say to me, 'you have a story for everyone," says Richard, whose clients range from corporate executives to medical officials, law enforcement officers and major league baseball players. "And I guess they're right. I think over a period of 33 years, I do have a lot of stories to tell."

Richard divides his professional time between the classroom at Bucks County (Pa.) Community College-- where he has served as a professor of psychology for the past 27 years--and a private practice at Newtown Psychological Center that he conducts with his wife, Ruthmary, specializing in marital therapy, anxiety, and depression.

"Basically my practice primarily deals with people who have temporary adjustment problems," explained Richard. "Something is happening in their life right now. Maybe it's psychological or marital. Perhaps they are going through major organizational changes--spinoffs and corporate takeovers. Think of all the people you know who have been fired. Whether they're making $42,000 or $142,000, the level of stress is still the same. People are walking around thinking they are very secure and the next day, Boom! Their six figure salary is down to zero. This can bring people down to their knees really fast!"

It happened to Richard in 1966. He had been working for five years as an administrator and an instructor of psychology at Temple University Community College. He was doing very well professionally, participating in senior level decisions, and loving his work. Then, for various political and economic reasons, the institution was suddenly shut down by Pennsylvania's Department of Education.

"The stresses that a 29 year-old athlete who has just been released and a 51 year-old executive who has just gotten a golden handshake are not identical but very similar."

"There was a lot of pain," recalls Richard, who later earned a doctorate in counseling psychology at Temple. "I was bitter and angry. I was really not a very nice person to live with. But my wife was just wonderful in terms of giving support because I never had been unemployed in my life."

Fortunately, Richard landed on his feet at the new (three-year-old) Bucks County Community College where, 25 years later, he received the Alumni Association's Homecoming Award for Excellence in Teaching. "Ironically, almost everyone who left Temple did very well," Richard said. "I went from an instructor at Temple to an associate professor. I was a tenured professor at the age of 29."

When Temple closed, Richard decided to build a "Survival Kit": his private practice. "When people come to see me with organizational stressers, I tell them just to remember three things," says Richard. "I tell them, 'you work for yourself, you work for your family, and you work at this place--in that order. And don't ever get them screwed up.' Business organizations don't like to hear anybody talk this way. They say, 'Wait a minute! This will hold people back from being team players and things like that.' My response is that I don't think so. As long as everything is going okay, you can be a great team player because you are still working for yourself."

Richard draws much of his material from athletics, particularly baseball. It all began in 1981 when he invited Phillies broadcaster Chris Wheeler to speak to his stress management class at BCCC. Since then he has used guest speakers like American League umpire Al Clark, 76ers owner Harold Katz, San Francisco Giants pitcher Steve Frey and Frey's wife, Bobbi. He has also co-authored a book with Wheeler entitled Not Too High, Not Too Low: Stress Management Strategies for Professional Baseball Players and Their Fans. In 1985 he conducted a stress workshop for some 58 major league baseball executives including Bill Giles, Al Rosen, and Dallas Green in Florida.

"In terms of sports there's a never-ending supply of examples of stress," says Richard. "The stressers that athletes face are accelerated and magnified. When I screw up at work, maybe 10 or 20 people know about it. When Juan Bell screws up, 32,000 people and a national TV audience on ESPN know about it."

Richard is especially interested in problems faced by athletes at the end of their playing careers. "The stresses that a 29-year-old athlete who has just been released and a 51 year-old executive who has just gotten a golden handshake are not identical but very similar," he explained. "You've been playing since you were 17. You may or may not have some college credits. What are you going to do with the rest of your life? Some tennis players have been coddled from their early years. They've been surrounded by entourages who do everything for them. Their careers are often over by their late teens and some don't even have a high school diploma."

Richard's lectures and workshops are replete with anecdotes and examples from sports, business, and industry that contain vivid, high-imagery-loaded-language. He learned this highly effective technique from the late Brother Vincent Grimes. "When he taught abnormal psychology, you just sat back and enjoyed the pictures," says Richard. "I mean, he painted these word pictures. My colleagues tell me that you can close your eyes and almost see people being there.

"I guess I have great respect and appreciation for the power of metaphors."

Dear Fellow Graduates,

While a senior at Father Judge High School, I had scholarship offers from St. Joseph's, Seton Hall, Catholic University, and La Salle. Through the generosity of La Salle alumni, I was able to attend my first choice — La Salle.

Now, four years later, I have another choice: Boston College and the University of Maryland have offered me a place in their graduate departments. Soon I'll make up my mind, but first I have to take care of one important obligation, to say Thank You! Through your support of La Salle's Annual Fund, you made all this possible.

Thank You,

Leon Ellerson at his desk. His company, Keystone Computer Associates, Inc., has been honored twice for its growth and success by the Small Business Administration.

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

Leon Ellerson had never heard of computers when he graduated from La Salle. Now he's one of the industry's top experts

When Leon Ellerson, '56, graduated from La Salle with a bachelor's degree in mathematics, he faced a major decision: should he go to work in the new, relatively unexplored space industry or should he try his hand at the equally-fascinating, but unknown computer field?

Ellerson chose the latter. He accepted an offer from Remington-Rand UNIVAC (now known as Unisys) and found himself working alongside the two inventors of the computer--John Mauchly and John Eckert. Within a decade, he was a minor partner of an emerging software services company, Keystone Computer Associates, Inc. Ten years later he was running the company and today that firm is one of the leading software and consulting companies on the east coast with some 180 employees and offices in suburban Philadelphia, Maryland, and Virginia.

"It was really a big shock to all of us that we knew early in the evening that Eisenhower was going to win big."

"I made the right choice," recalled Ellerson recently at his corporate headquarters located in Fort Washington, Pa. "It was the most exciting time to be working with computers and I was fortunate to be with some of the brightest people I've ever met. If I had stayed in the space industry, I would have been sort of an average person in middle management right now at a company like GE or Martin-Marietta."

Instead, Ellerson has emerged as one of the most respected entrepreneurs in the computer industry. His company has been honored twice for its growth and success by the Small Business Administration and he was selected as the Philadelphia district's "Small Business Person of the Year" in 1978.

Keystone deals primarily in government defense work--specializing in anti-submarine warfare--but expects to be downsizing its military involvement significantly in the next few years. Its largest client, the U.S. Naval Air Warfare Center in Warminster, Pa., is moving most of its operation to Patuxent River, Md., and Ellerson sees his company moving more aggressively into the commercial/ civilian area in the near future. "Right now we are about 80% government," he says. "We see that going down to under 50% in the next two or three years."

Ellerson graduated from Central High School and transferred to La Salle after attending Temple for two years where, as he puts it, his academic record was less than spectacular. "I was amazed how readily La Salle accepted me," he recalled, "especially being a minority in the 1950s. In the years to come, I really felt beholden to La Salle because of that. Sometimes you forget these things, but when I think back, it really changed my life."

After graduating, Ellerson chose a job at UNIVAC over a position at GE that would have placed him in the space industry. "I had never even heard of computers before I interviewed at UNIVAC," he says. "I didn't understand the job at UNIVAC, but I really liked the people who interviewed me." Moreover, Ellerson had no idea that he would be working with the two pioneers of the computer industry.

During World War II, John Mauchly, a professor at the University of Pennsylvania, and John Eckert, an electronics engineer, had been asked by the U.S. Army to develop a quicker method for computing artillery firing tables. Their research resulted in the first electronic computer. Known as ENIAC (Electronic Numerical Integrator and Calculator), it was built at Penn in 1945 using punched cards for input and output data.

By 1951, Mauchly and Eckert were producing the first of a famous series of computers--the UNIVACS-- which used magnetic tape for its data and provided the basic ideas behind the design of the modern computer. Ellerson ended up working for Mauchly, who headed up a 30 person programming group. Eckert ran an engineering group.

Ellerson was profoundly moved when he received the 1991 Warren Smith, M.D. Award given annually by La Salle's African American students.

"When I graduated from La Salle, I had never heard of John Mauchly," says Ellerson, who recalls that Mauchly was primarily interested in developing computers to help predict the weather. "Actually it was a while before I knew how important he really was. He was just a boss. Actually I worked very closely with him. He was very accessible." (Years later, Ellerson learned that one of his math professors at La Salle, the late Brother Damian Connelly, had worked at the University of Pennsylvania with Mauchly and Eckert.)

In 1956, Ellerson's first programming task involved a computerized attempt to predict a national presidential election. "It was interesting because we worked long hours using a lot of techniques," he says. "It was really a big shock to all of us that we knew early in the evening that Eisenhower was going to win big. And nobody believed that." The TV network (Ellerson doesn't recall which one) that contracted to use UNIVAC's projections was so skeptical that it declined to broadcast them. Another network that was running a Remington Rand electric shaver commercial did carry UNIVAC's bold prediction, however.

Ellerson left UNIVAC and went to work as manager of the computer operating system--what we know today as "MS-DOS" on PCs was then called "Executive Systems"-- at the Philco Corporation in 1963. His team also experimented with a prototype of a "time-sharing" system, similar to "Client Server" or "Windows" systems used to maximize time available inside a computer today. There he was reunited with John Guernaccini, his friend and co-worker at UNIVAC. Two years later, when the Ford Motor Co. purchased Philco, the handwriting was on the wall that the new Philco-Ford was not going to remain in the computer business. With Guernaccini as majority stockholder, Ellerson and two others formed Keystone Computer Associates in 1965. Except for a seven year period from 1967 to 1975 when the company was owned by University Computing Co., a Dallas, Texas-based computing company, Keystone has flourished on its own. "We've always grown very slowly. We've never over-expanded," says Ellerson. "We liked the fact that we were independent, safe, and secure."

Ellerson has since relinquished most of the day-to-day operation at Keystone to Guernaccini and executive vice president Ken Clancy, another veteran from UNIVAC, while devoting much of his time to a proprietary package that enables banks throughout the world to exchange money, buy and sell stocks, facilitate loans and letters of credit, and send other messages. Known as "BCS," this sophisticated banking communication system is currently running at a half-dozen banks and will soon be installed at the Treasury Department, in Washington, D.C.

Ellerson had no idea that he would be working with the two pioneers of the computer industry.

Ellerson, a member of La Salle's Board of Trustees, received the 1991 Warren E. Smith, M.D. Award, given annually by the university's African American students, "for his commitment to La Sallian values, his contribution to the community, his professional success and outstanding example to La Salle students." Although he never knew Dr. Smith personally, Ellerson was profoundly moved by the honor. "The award meant a lot because of the people who received it before me and because of what Warren Smith accomplished in his life and what he meant to his family and his community."

Ellerson says that it's very difficult to predict the future for the computer industry but he does see mainframes essentially disappearing from the workplace.

"We liked the fact that we were independent, safe, and secure."

"You'll still see them in large government agencies like the Internal Revenue Service and Defense Department," he explained. "But mainframes will probably be replaced by personal computers and microprocessors in small companies and banks who will be looking for ways to develop networks and connect small computers. I think you'll see companies like IBM and Unisys becoming more involved in the integration of these networks because differently manufactured hardware and software needs a reasonable way of talking to each other."

You can be sure that Keystone Computer Associates will be helping the dialogue along.

Honor Roll of Donors

James J. Lynch, '71, and Kathleen Gordon Lynch, '77, join John F. Carabello, D.M.D., '62, prior to the 1994 Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony at the Union League of Philadelphia. Dr. Carabello served as volunteer chair of the Alumni Annual Fund from 1992-94. Mr. and Mrs. Lynch will serve as co-chairs for the next two years. Mr. Lynch, a member of the university's Board of Trustees, is executive vice-president of Midlantic Bank.

Dear Friends,

On behalf of the entire La Salle community, I am pleased to express our collective thanks for the generosity and support of our many benefactors.

1993-94 was indeed an exceptionally challenging and yet rewarding year for the University and its fund-raising program. Among the many achievements reported in this Honor Roll of Donors, several highlights are certainly worthy of special mention:

• Total gifts and grants from all sources, including private donations and government grants, increased by 39.5%, from $ 3,861,522 to $ 5,388,328. In terms of overall results, 1993-94 was the best year our fund-raising program has had since 1987-88, and it was the third best year that we have ever had since we organized our development program in the 1960s.

• Overall pledges and contributions to the capital campaign, again from private and government sources, passed the $ 16.7 million mark. Although this total is still modest compared to our ten-year goal of $ 100 million, it is by far the best start that La Salle has ever had to any of its fund-raising campaigns.

• Alumni giving grew by 7.1% to an all-time record-setting $ 1,620,954, and the number of alumni donors increased from 5,656 to 5,811.

• Despite the challenges of tuition payments, parent donations increased by 7.7% to $ 55,192.

• The second annual Charter Dinner/ La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony honored Joseph F. Paquette, Jr., Chairman of the Board of PECO

Energy Company, and raised more than $ 54,000 for the University's scholarship fund.

• The School of Nursing received several major multi-year grants totalling $ 1,541,041 from the Independence Foundation and the United States Department of Health and Human Services.

All of us at La Salle deeply appreciate the many forms of support that we have received from our many benefactors, and it is my great pleasure to again say thank you to all of you—our alumni, parents, faculty staff members, friends, and Christian Brothers—for everything that you have done, and are continuing to do, on our behalf.

Despite our fund-raising successes, La Salle still faces one of the most difficult periods in its history as the University struggles to increase its full-time enrollment and to balance its operating budget. At the heart of both issues, lies the enormous challenge of student financial aid.

ALUMNI
A TEN YEAR COMPARISON

	DONORS	DOLLARS
1994	5,811	$1,620,954
1993	5,656	$1,513,310
1992	5,612	$1,417,949
1991	5,811	$1,330,674
1990	6,188	$1,397,773
1989	5,023	$1,262,775
1988	5,330	$1,142,678
1987	5,443	$1,050,819
1986	5,279	$945,312
1985	3,605	$600,998

Since the late 1980s, we have more than doubled the institutional resources that we allocate to financial aid, and, in 1994-95, we will spend almost $ 8.8 million on student scholarships and grants of all kinds. Despite our best efforts, we are, however, falling progressively behind the competition, and we are losing many qualified students each year because other colleges and universities are either less expensive or they provide more lucrative financial aid packages.

Quite clearly, La Salle's long-term vitality depends upon our being able to reverse this trend by generating additional resources for student financial aid. As a tuition-dependent institution with a rather modest ($ 27 million) endowment, the only way that we can achieve this objective is through a dramatic increase in contributions through the fund-raising program. That is, of course, one of the principal (if not the principal) objectives of the capital campaign that we launched in October, 1992, but it will take sacrificial commitments by all of our constituencies to make it happen.

As we look to the future, then, we ask those of you who have been donors to continue your support for La Salle, and, wherever possible, to increase your financial commitment to the University and students. Similarly, we ask those of you who have not yet had the opportunity to participate in the campaign to do so this year by making a donation at whatever level you feel is most appropriate.

And so, let me conclude this introduction to the Honor Roll of Donors with both a reiteration of my sincerest thanks to all of you for the financial support that you have given to La Salle in the past, and my request that you do whatever you can to continue to assist the University in the future.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Joe Burke

HIGHLIGHTS

Brother Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, welcomes Mr. and Mrs. Charles J. Reilly, '62, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph A. Coffey, Jr., '64, to the President's reception and dinner for major donors at the Pyramid Club in center city. Mr. Reilly, a member of the university's Board of Trustees, is the president of Reilly Foam Corporation, in Conshohocken, Pa. Mr. Coffey is a partner in the law firm of Coffey and Kaye, in Bala Cynwyd, Pa.

In keeping with the recently published CASE Campaign Standards, the gifts and grants included in the 1994 Honor Roll of Donors are divided into two categories: Private and Government Sources. Private sources include donations from individuals, corporations, foundations, and trust funds. Government sources include grants awarded by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the Federal Government.

All gifts and grants reported in both categories involve payments received between July 1, 1993 and June 30, 1994. Multi-year pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1994 will be published in subsequent Honor Rolls as payments are received.

In accordance with Internal Revenue Service regulations, gifts of securities have been reported at the mean (average) between their highest and lowest values on the dates the gifts were made to La Salle University.

The Internal Revenue Service now requires that we provide a receipt for any private donation of $250 or more. The thank you letters that the University routinely provides to donors constitute such receipts. If you need any additional verification of our receipt of your donation, please contact us at 215-951-1539.

Effective January 1, 1994, the value of a contribution is limited to the excess of the contribution over the value of goods and services received in return. La Salle does not provide any benefits to those donors who contribute $ 999 or less annually to the University. La Salle does provide benefits to those donors who contribute $1,000 or more annually and/or are members of the President's Club, the San Miguel Club, the De La Salle Society, the University Club, or the Charter Club. For further information about the benefits provided, please contact us 215-951-1539.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our apology and notify us of the mistake at 215-951-1539.

Several of the contributions listed below are duplicated in more than one category. The unduplicated total of gifts and grants—from private and government sources—listed in this report for 1993-94 is $5,388,328.

To ensure that your name appears in the 1995 Honor Roll of Donors, please use the inserted remittance envelope to send in your gift to the University at your earliest convenience.

La Salle Introduces Undergraduate and Graduate Programs at Bucks County Community College

Brother President Joseph F. Burke congratulates James Linksz, president of Bucks County Community College (foreground, second from left) after signing historic agreement between two institutions. Marian Jenson Barford (left), chairman of the BCCC Board of Trustees, and Dr. Daniel Pantaleo (right), La Salle's provost, also signed.

A unique partnership, believed to be the first between a public and private undergraduate educational institution in Pennsylvania, was established on August 15 between La Salle and Bucks County Community College.

Brother President Joseph Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., and Bucks County Community College's President James J. Linksz signed a renewable four year agreement in which La Salle will offer eight undergraduate and graduate level programs leading to bachelor's or master's degrees at the Bucks County Community College (BCCC) campus in Newtown.

Complete bachelor's degree programs are now available for undergraduate students majoring in criminal justice, leadership, professional writing, psychology and public administration. Students can also complete all requirements on the BCCC campus for a master's degree in education and all but two courses for a master's in psychology. Six core courses required for a master's degree in nursing will also be available at La Salle's BCCC campus.

Speaking at the signing ceremony on BCCC's campus, Brother Burke explained that La Salle has never lost its commitment to educational outreach in the Greater Philadelphia region.

"Our program of educational access to the Hispanic community," La Salle's president added, "our involvement in our immediate neighborhood in Philadelphia, our partnerships with the elementary and secondary schools in and around the city including Bucks County, and our offering of undergraduate and graduate programs at locations off our campus including for many years here in Bucks County, all amplify our fundamental educational mission--to prepare men and women for lives of effective service and visionary leadership to their communities."

Brother Burke said that La Salle officials anticipate that the university's relationship with Bucks County Community College will expand in its scope of programs and continue to improve access to higher education for residents of Bucks County and surrounding areas.

Most of the initial classes are being offered part-time on weekday evenings and Saturdays.

Under the agreement students who earn associate degrees from Bucks County Community College will have the option to continue their studies on BCCC's Newtown campus where professors from La Salle University's School of Continuing Studies will offer all of the third and fourth year upper division courses leading to La Salle bachelor's degrees.

Upon completing their requirements for an associate degree from Bucks County Community College students can apply to La Salle to be accepted as a degree candidate. They will pay BCCC's credit-hour rate for the associate degree courses ($66 per credit), then will be charged at La Salle's undergraduate Continuing Studies rate ($245 per credit). A total of 120 credit hours are required for a La Salle University bachelor's degree.

La Salle has also offered a Master's Degree in Business Administration (MBA) program on the campus of Delaware Valley College, in Doylestown, since 1988.

La Salle's provost, Dr. Daniel C. Pantaleo, said that university officials are highly enthusiastic about the unprecedented partnership agreement with Bucks County Community College.

"This partnership will enable us to extend our educational services not only in Bucks County but also to surrounding areas like Montgomery County and New Jersey where students will be able to earn a bachelor's or master's degree from La Salle without traveling far from their homes," he added.

Dr. Pantaleo emphasized that students attending classes on the Bucks County campus would also have access to services on La Salle University's campus in northwest Philadelphia such as the university's $12 million Connelly Library.

Pantaleo added, "We are particularly pleased with the warmth and collaboration of our relationship with BCCC. La Salle sees this as a major step in what we anticipate to be a growing and exemplary relationship with BCCC in service to the people of Bucks County."

For more information about Bucks County courses, interested students can call La Salle's School of Continuing Studies at (215) 951-1400.

Dr. Peter J. Filicetti has been named director of the university's Counseling Center, succeeding Dr. Frank Schreiner, who retired. Filicetti has been on the La Salle staff for 28 years, most recently as associate professor of psychology and assistant director of the Counseling Center.

La Salle Moves Up for 3rd Straight Year in "Best" Regional Rankings of U.S. News & World Report

For the third straight year, La Salle University has improved its rankings as one of the best colleges and universities in the northeast region of United States, according to the annual survey conducted by U.S. News and World Report magazine.

La Salle, the only Philadelphia college to make the list in each of the last two years, moved up to eighth place among regional universities of the north in the eighth annual "America's Best Colleges" special report. La Salle was 10th out of 15 colleges ranked in each region last year and 12th, two years ago.

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., said the U.S. News & World Report ranking is another indication that La Salle's comfortable size, friendly campus environment, and focus on learning "sells itself" to parents and prospective students.

"It's been very clear from these reports that La Salle's strength is what happens inside and outside the classroom," Brother Burke added. "The relationship between our faculty and students and a good, solid learning environment is the centerpiece of what goes on at this university."

Some 1,400 four-year schools were included in the study including 500 institutions in La Salle's category. The rankings were based upon five criteria including academic reputation in which La Salle was rated ninth; graduate rate (ranked 11), student selection (16), faculty resources (23), financial resources (38), and alumni satisfaction (102).

Brother Burke added that La Salle's high ranking is reflected by the success of many of its 32,000 alumni.

"When you look at their accomplishments in a variety of fields like medicine, law, banking, nursing, teaching--just to mention a few, it's clear that something positive goes on here at the university to help our graduates succeed. A La Salle University education has been judged over time to work."

Seminar on Shakespeare Held with $63,974 Grant from NEH

Dr. Barbara Millard (center) discusses a scene from Othello with teachers from across the U.S. participating in the summer seminar, Shakespeare and the Creative Act, Othello and Hamlet.

A seminar supported by a $63,974 grant from the National Endowment of the Humanities, Shakespeare and the Creative Act, Othello and Hamlet, was conducted on La Salle's campus this summer by Dr. Barbara Millard, Ph.D., dean of the School of Arts and Sciences and professor of English.

Fifteen teachers from as far away as Tennessee, California and Hawaii, attended the five week seminar to study Shakespeare as a playwright, the text as a script and the plot as action. The focus for the seminar was on the motion of Shakespeare's genius in the creation of his plays from other materials; the art of the playwright's dramaturgy; and the energies of these dramatic scripts in current and past productions.

Seminar sessions included research and analytic reports presented by the participants, close reading, interpretive discussion of videotaped productions, directorial exercises and enactment workshops. The seminar concluded with a trip to the Stratford Shakespeare Festival in Ontario, Canada.

The National Endowment for the Humanities is an independent grant-making agency established by Congress in 1965 to support research, education, and public projects in the humanities.

Summer seminars for school teachers are offered by the NEH to provide teachers an opportunity for advanced study of significant texts. The participants in each seminar work under the direction of an accomplished teacher, and active scholar, studying seminal works in the humanities systematically and thoroughly. Through the seminar teachers have the opportunity to deepen their knowledge and enhance their ability to impart an understanding of the humanities to their students.

La Salle Establishes J. Hugh and Nancy Devlin Scholarship for Student from New Jersey

La Salle University has received a $250,000 pledge from the J. Hugh and Nancy Devlin Fund in Community Funds, Inc. to establish a perpetual endowed scholarship at the university beginning in the 1995-96 academic year.

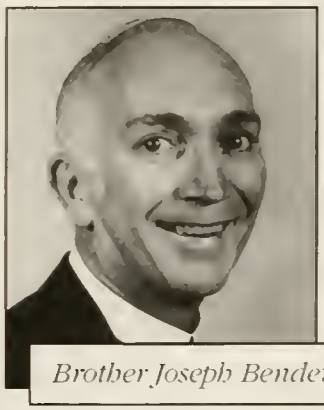
Hugh Devlin, '64, and his wife, Nancy, of Fair Haven, N.J., established the scholarship to provide complete tuition, room and board, and other expenses for a student from Holy Name Parish, in Camden, N.J., who attends La Salle University as a full-time undergraduate.

Student recipients will be selected by the Financial Aid Office at La Salle University based upon recommendations made by the pastor of Holy Name Parish and the principal of Camden Catholic High School.

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., expressed sincere appreciation to the Devlins for the gift that has been pledged as part of the university's $10 million capital campaign.

"Needless to say, we are elated to be the recipient of such kind generosity," Brother Burke said. "Everyone at the university is very excited about the scholarship fund being established for an economically disadvantaged student and is highly appreciative of the many forms of support that the Devlins have offered to La Salle over the years."

Brother Joseph Bender, Academic Advisor and Counselor, Dies Suddenly



Brother Joseph Bender

Brother Joseph Bender, F.S.C., Ph.D., the academic advisor and counselor in La Salle's School of Continuing Studies for the past 21 years, died suddenly on Aug. 14 of a heart attack. He was stricken at his residence at 5615 N. 20th st., adjacent to La Salle's campus, and rushed to Germantown Hospital where he was pronounced dead. He was 67.

Brother Bender celebrated his 50th anniversary as a member of the Christian Brothers in June.

Before joining what was then known as La Salle's Evening Division as an academic advisor counselor in 1973, Brother Bender taught Latin and served as guidance counselor at Philadelphia's West Catholic High School for Boys from 1949-66 and again from 1969-73, and at Trinity High School, in Shiremanstown, Pa., from 1966-69.

La Salle's Brother President Emeritus Daniel Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., who was in the novitiate with Brother Bender recalled him as a very sharp, very witty individual in an interview with the Philadelphia Daily News.

"He was a great listener and marvelous talent," said Brother Daniel. "He was someone who could strengthen people simply because of the interest he showed them and the encouragement he gave them. He was great to cheer them up."

Brother Bender earned a bachelor's degree in classical studies from The Catholic University of America, in Washington, D.C., in 1949, and master's and Ph.D. degrees in the same field from the University of Pennsylvania. He also held a master's degree in guidance and counseling from Temple University.

Brother Bender was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa Association, the American Personnel Guidance Association, the Pennsylvania School Counselors Association, the National Catholic Guidance Conference, the American School Counselors Association, and Personnel and Guidance Association of Greater Philadelphia.

He is survived by a sister, Mrs. Alice Collins, of Pittsburgh, and a brother, James Bender, of St. Louis, Mo.

A Mass of Resurrection was celebrated on Aug. 18 at the La Salle University Chapel on campus. Burial was the following day at the Christian Brothers Cemetery, in Ammendale, Md.

Erwin von Allmen (left), a lecturer in the university's MBA program and president of W.C. Smith Inc., a Philadelphia-based confectionery and specialty food equipment company, chats with some of the eight business students from Barcelona who attended classes at La Salle this summer and participated in his Management Entrepreneurship class. The students, who attend schools conducted by the Christian Brothers in Spain, visited businesses in Philadelphia and New York as part of their American cultural and corporate experience. They spent five weeks at La Salle.

Herron Promoted to Rear Admiral

William E. Herron, CPA, '67, was recently selected as Rear Admiral (Lower Half) of the United States Naval Reserve. The appointment was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy and confirmed by the U.S. Senate.

Herron, a native of Philadelphia, entered the Aviation Reserve Officer Candidate Program while attending La Salle University, after which he served a number of active duty assignments in the U.S. Navy until 1970.

The Art of Developing Corporate (and Alumni) Leaders

Michael G. Mullen, '63, is on a dual mission in California.

As general manager, executive development and personnel resources for ARCO, Mike is responsible for identifying and developing the right kind of corporate leaders for the company that employs 25,000 people throughout the world. He was promoted back to the corporate side two years ago after serving as vice president of human resources for ARCO's refining and marketing operations.

As the unofficial coordinator of La Salle's Alumni Association in Southern California, he has assumed the responsibility of organizing some 275 graduates of the university who now live and work in the Los Angeles/San Diego area.

"I was surprised by the number of La Salle people who have moved out here in the past ten years," said Mullen. "What they bring is a lot of enthusiasm, a lot of energy, and a lot of creativity. I was encouraged by a couple of events that we had. I really didn't think that too many people would turn out but the response was pretty positive."

Mullen, who is working with a nucleus of about 15 men and women, sees the day coming when there will be three La Salle alumni chapters in California: San Diego, San Francisco, and, especially, Los Angeles. "I see us becoming a chapter because we have so many people who are interested in sharing the workload," he explained. "Here there are a lot of things that you can wrap interesting events around that can bring people together. But it really has to be appealing, not just a simple lunch or a simple get-together."

Mullen says that his primary charge at ARCO is providing for the continuity of the company. "My main function is an assessment function, assessing leadership qualities in people, nurturing and instilling those qualities and giving people the skills to develop them," he explained recently at his office high above downtown Los Angeles. "A real leader has to know how to delegate authority and responsibility to individuals who are closest to the problem and best equipped to solve the problem. It's more about getting things done with people rather than just barking orders."

Mullen, who started with ARCO 30 years ago as a marketing rep in Philadelphia, also has responsibility for ARCO's labor relations, medical, employee communications, and compensation functions. LA is his 13th different stop with the company—"I stopped counting after 24 different jobs."—that has seen him also working in sales, labor relations, and management development in places from New England to Dallas, from Denver to Pittsburgh. "What a wonderful ride," says Mullen about his three decades with ARCO. "It's been a great experience."

Mullen has worked on various projects all over the world, including China and the Middle East, and found himself handling mining operations in Iran just weeks before the Shah was overthrown. "I got out right before things started to topple," he recalled. "You could see student groups building up. You could sense something was happening. We got to know some of the hotel help and they were saying how things were getting nasty and were talking a lot more openly about how bad the Shah was. Then our floor captain, who had worked in New York for a while, suggested, 'Look, you guys seem like pretty decent folks. When this thing happens you better get out of here before it's not going to be very pretty.' Our people got out just in the nick of time."

Mullen, who majored in business administration and finance at La Salle, is active with Cal Tech's Center for Executive Development. He is involved with a number of charitable endeavors including the Southern California Home for Battered and Abused Women, where he serves on the Board of Directors; the YMCA, and a project at the University of Southern California to stimulate educational interest among inner-city children. He and his wife, Carol, have three children, Shannon, Chris, and Meaghan.
